Foreword

In this volume of THE SOUTHERNER will be found an authentic record of the lives and accomplishments of a large number of Southerners, who are helping to make Southern history.

The book is a work of reference which should be valuable to all of those interested in the history and biography of people living, in what many think, is the garden spot of the nation.

To the end that these biographies may be correct and reliable, the utmost care has been taken to insure their accuracy, and they may be used with confidence.

It is our sincere hope that this issue of THE SOUTHERNER may find a permanent place on the shelves of leading newspapers and many libraries throughout America.

THE PUBLISHERS

The Eternal South

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

The following article which was written sometime ago by Mr. Graves, the well known editor, author and lecturer for another publication was considered so good that the editor of THE SOUTHERNER has requested permission to reproduce it herewith.

When did "The South" begin? The answer depends upon the answer to another question—what is "the South"? Is it a thing in the geography book, the history book, the biology book, the book of economics or the book of life? In some estimates the South began in those six days when the Lord was creating heaven and earth and contrived for this particular portion the climate, forests, soil, mineral deposits, rainfalls, shore lines, navigable streams, warm suns and bright moons identifiable with it today. In other estimates it began when Jamestown was founded in 1607. Others say it was when Menendez, the Spaniard, established a fort at St. Augustine in 1565; others when Sieur de Bienville settled a community at Mobile in 1702. Some say it was when the first ship load of Negro slaves was brought by New Englanders from Africa and sold below the Potomac, and some when Eli Whitney invented the cotton gin in 1798 and fixed a one-crop economy upon a whole corner of the continent. Perhaps the best statement of the case is that the South had no beginning, that it is a product of many beginnings, a merging of many currents, a multiplication of many personalities, influences and events.

There was no beginning and there is no end. In the long and shattered years after the Confederate War there was talk of an Old South gone. In the years of recovery after tragic "Reconstruction" there was talk from high-hearted men like Henry Grady of a New South about to be born. The terms were carried into the Twentieth Century, and men spoke or wrote of a gentle South vanished and a somewhat awkward one growing, identifying the old with agriculture and the new with industry, picturing the old as romantic and individual, the new as increasingly realistic, collective and cold. They loved the old for its peace and plenty, pitied the new for its poverty, its problems, its bitter divisions. But the ghost of Hernando de Soto, watching from the stance of four centuries, would hardly report the distinction so sharp. The shades of John Smith, Walter Raleigh and James Oglethorpe would scarcely accept the point of view. In the long eyes of history there are measures of victory and defeat, of happiness and pain, of opportunity and problem, of agriculture and industry, of romance and realism in the whole story and if the proportions have varied that is only a manifestation of life's own variety. In the secret of its own soul there is one South, an eternal South, surviving through yesterday, today and tomorrow, growing now in this direction and now in that, defeated here, winning there, never ceasing, never ending.

The settlement of the South has been a search of men for land. In the seventeenth century and the first half of the eighteenth men from England and other European countries were clearing the forests of the Southern Coastal Plain to make a living on their farms and to send back to the motherlands the tobacco, hewn timber, and naval stores which could be exchanged for manufactured goods. By the beginning of the nineteenth century the Southern Piedmont had been settled, the mountain passes of the Appalachians had been pierced and the habilitation of the Mississippi plains was about to begin. Iron and iron goods were being produced in the South, and there was extensive home-manufacture of clothing, shoes, harness and farm implements by handicraft. Textile machinery had been introduced in New England but was still several decades from the South. Southern industry was developing but mostly as a convenience for an agricultural people too far from the manufacturing centers of the North and lacking adequate transportation facilities. In 1810, with about 46 percent of the country's population, the South was manufacturing about 28 to 30 percent of the value of manufactured products of the United States—considerably better than it does today.

In immediately succeeding years this manufacturing proportion declined as the great migration across the Appalachians into Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas—in search of more land or new land or better land—went on. By 1840 all the Indian tribes had been moved beyond Arkansas and the white man was supreme. In the first 50 years of the nineteenth century American settlers, most of them Southerners, claimed more than 400,000,000 acres of new land and the population of the South beyond the Appalachian line increased by about 4,800,000. In a pioneering of this sort there was no place for industry and by 1850 the South was producing less than 14 percent of the manufactured goods of the country, with 39 percent of the population.

Meanwhile, the Southeast of the Appalachians was becoming more and more established in its ways and days, with cotton supplementing tobacco, rice, indigo, timber and naval stores to stimulate a social, political and economic life abounding. Cotton was becoming a king, and his courtiers lords of great estate. Not until the century was well advanced did the stain appear upon the royal purple—the familiar stain of over-production. Then, with falling prices, cotton income less than costs, distress came to the South and with it great dispute—and after that, the ruin of war and reconstruction.

The true value of real and personal property in the South declined from $6,300,000,000 (or 39 percent of the national total) in 1860 to $4,200,000,000 (or 14 percent of the national total) in 1870. A $2,000,000,000 investment in 4,000,000 slaves became overnight a liability rather than an asset. Not until the 'seventies, when the carpetbaggers were driven out and the South resumed control of its political and social life, did economic rehabilitation begin. Slowly there emerged a "New South" not radically different from the old save for the fact of a Negro working for hire or a share rather than for a master. Cotton and tobacco were still the great crops, conservatism still the great bent, agriculture still the great way.

Henry W. Grady lived his few years upon the scene and passed on; and the crop diversification and industrialization he preached were destined to wait long for their practice. The promise that developed in this period after war's end and before century's turn came more of educational impulses than of economic ones. It came of the work of such men as Alderman, Dabney, Aycock and Currie in the direction of an universal schooling out of which might come the taste to desire a better standard of living, the talent to obtain a better standard of living, and the character to keep and make culturally productive a better standard of living.

By 1900 there was evidence and talk of the industrial progress which was to give back to the South some of its comparative industrial place in the nation of 100 years before. The names of Henry DeBardeleben and Daniel Pratt in Alabama, of Wash and Buck Duke, and Moses and Caesar Cone in North Carolina came into history as Southern industrial pioneers. Birmingham had been born and become a target of national financial and industrial attention for the development of pig iron manufacture out of the red ores of Jones Valley. Atlanta had come back from the winds of war and begun its new economic career as the site of Southern branches and offices of Northern business and manufacturing companies. In Florida the discovery of phosphate rock and an era of railroad building under the drive and dream of Henry M. Flagler had brought a boom anticipatory of other and greater ones to come. Transportation was being looked to as the key to unlock the doors of the North to the products of the South, making possible Southern industry and a diversified and intensive Southern agriculture.

In the three decades of the Twentieth Century which preceded the great depression the processes of education, industrialization and farm diversification gathered momentum and their beneficence was brave in the statistics of the Southern states. The amounts spent for public school education in the South increased from $28,000,000 in 1900 to $415,600,000 in 1930. North Carolina, which led all other Southern states in emphasis upon education, increased its annual expenditures 38-fold in this period. Florida's increase was 24-fold, Alabama's 23, Louisiana's 19, Tennessee's 13. But even with this, and with all the sacrifices it meant in a region having more children to educate and less money with which to educate them than any other, 1930 found the South still far behind the rest of the country in education. It found it spending about $10.80 per capita of population, as compared with New England's $19.55, the Middle Atlantic States' $25.20, the Rocky Mountain States' $23.51, the Pacific States' $24.40.

Discovery and use of the South's unequalled mineral resources was accelerated in this period as a result of the new industrial processes and the increasing transportation facilities. By 1930 the total value of minerals mined in the South was $1,529,000,000, more than 36 percent of the national total. In the decade after the World War, Southern mineral production increased 59 percent while that of the rest of the country was increasing only 16 percent. Another and older Southern process—lumbering—grew mightily in this period, so that by 1928 the total value of Southern forest products was something like a billion dollars. The coming of a kraft paper manufacturing industry increased the demand—and a developing concern for sound forestry practices and reforestation promised to become binding upon all parties, big and little. Georgia's famous chemist, Dr. Charles Herty, was at work upon his process for making newsprint and other white paper out of Southern pine, and an increasingly important rayon industry was employing Southern pine for its major raw material.

Sea-borne commerce shared honors with land-borne for the South in this era. By 1933 Southern ports were handling about 30 percent of the export foreign, water-borne, cargo tonnage of the country. This tonnage at Gulf Coast ports in 1935 was more than twice that of New York and nearly twice that of all Atlantic ports north of the Chesapeake. New Orleans had nearly five times the export tonnage of Boston, and Texas ports had more than New York. Cotton and cotton products formed about 17 percent of all Southern exports by value. In Texas the inland city of Houston was made a port with a canal, and in Alabama Birmingham was given access to the sea through development of the Warrior-Tombigbee rivers as an inland waterway. The importance of Southern ports for American exports was not matched in their importance for imports, however. In 1935 the ports of the South had only about 20 percent (in value) of the imports of the North Atlantic District, as against 88 percent of the exports.

The activity of Southern ports in the first three decades of the Twentieth Century was stimulated by the development of railway facilities not only at the ports but throughout the whole region. Within a period of about 30 years one-half of the total railroad mileage increase for the nation was in the South. By the 1930's the South had about 33 percent of the mileage of the United States, slightly more than its proportion would be on a basis of area and population.

In industrialization, as in education, the South made a progress more rapid in this period than any other parts of the Country but ended up still below average. By 1929 the total value of the products of Southern factories was 14.2 percent of the total for the country, less than half what it had been 120 years earlier and far less than the South's 31 per cent of the national population and 30 percent of the national area would require in quota. The South was advancing more rapidly industrially than any other region, however, especially in textiles, having supplanted New England as the cotton textile manufacturing area of the country, and become a major scene of the developing rayon industry.

But by 1930—as in 1607 and 1776 and 1861—under all was the land. Agriculture was still the great way even though the value of manufactured products was beginning to exceed the value of farm products. Farm population and employment still exceeded all others in the South. The proportion of rural population to total population was about two-thirds. And out of 14,300,000 persons in gainful occupations 5,600,000 were in agriculture. Southern farmers were producing 37 percent (in value) of the crops of the country on 31 percent of the land in crops and with 25 percent of the total capital investment. The boll weevil had come, and had a statue erected to him in Enterprise, Alabama, for the crop diversification he had provoked and especially for the peanut-growing industry which had resulted there from the cessation of cotton growing. In many parts of the South, especially in the central portions of Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, a livestock and dairying industry was developing in substitute for cotton and was getting an enthusiastic attention from farmers as well as from packers and economic philosophers. Truck gardening, fruit growing, hay-raising were coming into the agricultural scheme. Florida had discovered its ability to grow the finest grape-fruit in the world and sell them to the world. Supplementing these physical processes in promise for the agricultural South were new ventures in co-operation, in government aid, in science and general education for the farm people, and a dawn of realism in regard to the contaminating poverty of the Southern tenant farmer and sharecropper as well as the suicide of single-crop economy and soil depletion. North Carolina had become the first state in the Union to establish a regular state office to assist the farmer in marketing, and the first state to organize rural credit unions. Co-operative societies became active and effective in all the Southern states. State farm extension services multiplied, farmers organizations increased in number and size, farm demonstration and home demonstration work was popularized, and the South's percentage of the nation's total enrollment in federal-aided vocational agricultural schools increased from 10 percent in 1900 to nearly 20 percent in 1929.

With the great depression of 1929-33 and the following years of partial and interrupted recovery the South's distress had its measure, as ever before, in cotton's distress, for that was still the great staple in spite of all the new impulses of agriculture. Never indeed had the South belonged more to cotton for now it had become the processing as well as the growing region. The number of cotton spindles had increased from 4,467,383 of the nation's 19,472,000 total in 1900 to 18,264,126 of the nation's 26,700,946 in 1935. Of the 3,873,000 bales consumed in the United States in 1900, some 1,563,841, or less than half, had been consumed in the South; but of the total of 5,360,867 bales in 1935 the South consumed 4,323,802, or more than 81 percent. And the cottonseed industry had become a major one, rivaling even cotton itself, and representing a value in crude products in 1935 of $166,394,000.

In the economic illness that came upon America and the world in the 1930's, King Cotton was well nigh the sickest of all. The average price, which had been about 18 cents a pound in the season of 1928-29, fell to 15.05 in 1929-30, to 9.02 in 1930-31, to 5.60 in 1931-32. By 1934-35 it had climbed back to 11.98 but it declined again thereafter and in 1938-39 was only about 8 cents. The farm value of the cotton crop as of December 1, which had been $1,217,829,000 in 1929 was only $659,455,000 in 1930, and by 1932 reached a record low of $371,861,000. America's percentage of the world's production, which had ranged between 51 and 65 in the years 1912 to 1932, declined to 40 percent in 1935.

This was the period, however, in which, in an economic sense, the South became more conscious of itself and the nation became more conscious of the South than ever before in history. The poverty of the tenant farmer and the share-cropper became a favorite subject matter in both literature and economic inquiry. The balm of industry as a more than ever necessary balance for agriculture and outlet for the latter's excess products and populations become a favorite sermon of Southern chambers of commerce, just as the menace of industrial exploitation as contrasted with industrial development became a subject-matter of Southern liberals. The right of the South to more equitable freight rates, to a national tariff policy more mindful of its production and needs, to a wage differential, to federal educational assistance, to freedom from certain allegedly discriminatory federal taxes such as the one on margarine, began to be championed by editors and orators from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. When President Roosevelt, in 1938, named the South "the nation's Number One Economic Problem," Southern economic self-consciousness reached something like a maximum, with Southern opponents of the President bitterly insisting that far from being the nation's problem the South was the nation's hope, and other Southerners, more sympathetic with the administration, suggesting that while the South was indeed a major problem to the nation the very things which made it a problem—namely its poverty, its sub-standard competition, and its undeveloped purchasing power—made it a national opportunity as well.

In the meantime, partly in spite of the speeches, essays, editorials, novels and economic volumes and partly as a result of them, the processes of industrialization and agricultural science and diversification were being pushed once more and with a pace accelerated by the bitter economic distress. While great dispute gathered about the ultimate wisdom or value of the New Deal's crop and price control measures, there was no question of the educational value of the soil preservation and crop diversification programs accompanying the control measures, or of the aids extended to tenant farmers in the direction of farm ownership and science.

An outstanding agricultural development of this period was the accelerated supplanting of certain ancient aristocracies of cotton with the new nobility of herds and hay. By 1938 livestock raising in Georgia was producing a greater money return than cotton, cotton and cottonseed production being valued at $45,337,000 while livestock and livestock products had an estimated value of $73,078,000. In Arkansas in the 10 years from 1928 to 1938, cotton income decreased 48 percent from $142,000,000 to $72,000,000 (not including subsidy payments) while livestock income increased 24 percent from $50,000,000 to $62,000,000. In Alabama and Mississippi there were parallel increases. In the single year 1938 the number of livestock in the South increased by 2,899,000 to reach a total of 62,461,000. Of the total cash income of Southern agriculture in 1938, $1,426,815,000 was derived from crops and $943,003,000 from livestock and livestock products.

The good or bad of federal benefit and other agricultural payments during this period, like the good or bad of crop and price controls, will be debated through the years. Settled by the final statistics of the period, however, was the often claim that the South did not receive from the federal government its full share of the moneys distributed. Government payments to Southern farmers in 1938 amounted to $268,211,000. This was more than half the total of payments to all the farmers in the country ($482,221,000). When its proportion to total farm income is considered the balance in favor of the South is even greater. Of the total cash income of Southern farmers in that year, amounting to $2,638,029,000, government payments represented approximately 10 percent. Of the total of the whole country's farmers, amounting to $8,020,398,000, government payments amounted to only about six percent. Another basis of comparison is the relation of farm acreage to government payments. Southern farm acreage in 1938 was 120,517,700, or about 35 percent of the national total of 341,846,100 acres. But the South received approximately 56 percent of the total farm payments by the government.

In the period (1933-37) of recovery from nation-wide depression, a movement of equal import for the South with improved agricultural science was the quickened Southward march of industry. More than $450,000,000 was spent in constructing and improving Southern industrial plants in the 18-month period prior to July 1, 1937, surpassing the expenditures in any similar period in the South's history. The total value of manufactured products increased from $8,468,215,718 in 1935 to $11,454,794,098 in 1937, or 35 percent. By 1937 the value of the South's manufactured products was nearly 20 percent of the value of the whole country's, suggesting progress towards the 28 to 30 percent of the national total accounted for by the South 127 years before. By 1938 the South was producing 20 percent of the nation's pig iron, 17 percent of the hot rolled iron and steel, about 18 percent of the structural and ornamental iron work, about 85 percent of the cotton manufactures, more than 40 percent of the rayon, more than 68 percent of the fertilizer. Products of Southern furniture factories were valued at $141,624,472, representing an increase of almost 46 percent over 1935. The value of chemical products (a significant development in this period) reached a total of $725,368,750. In 1938 the new tinplate mill of the United States Steel Corporation went into operation at Birmingham, with promise of scores of new industries made possible by this source of an indispensable material. Twenty-nine percent of the new plant investment in the United States in 1937 was in the South. By 1939 the Southern paper industry had grown to an establishment of some 40 pulp mills with a total investment of over $200,000,000, and a $7,000,000 mill for the manufacture of newsprint paper out of Southern slash pine, after the formula developed by Dr. Herty, had been started at Lufkin, Texas. The diversification of industry, as necessary as the diversification of agriculture, was proceeding rapidly. At the beginning of World War II Southern industries with a total product value of over $100,000,000, ranked in order of value, were:

Industry	Total Value of Products
Petroleum refining	$1,003,197,624
Cotton manufactures	931,686,877

The economic diversities of which the South is capable and which it had begun to attain in the first four decades of the Twentieth Century were eloquent in an average day's bills of lading at Southern ports in this period. Cargoes incoming and going out matched in magic the ones of which John Masefield wrote and surpass them in importance. "Topaz and cinnamon and gold moldores" were missing but (before the War of 1939 limited all things) there were iron and steel from Birmingham to Japan, flour from Kansas to Holland, Southern cotton to Europe and the Far East, tobacco from Kentucky to the Orient; grape fruit from Florida to England, lime from Alabama to the West Indies, petroleum products from Louisiana to New York, tinfoil from Louisville to Shanghai, packing house products from Chicago to the Caribbean, lumber and naval stores from Georgia to the wide world . . . and, coming in, marble from Italy to Indiana and Ohio, asbestos roofing from Belgium for Alabama, asphalt from Trinidad to Chicago, fertilizer from Chile to Tennessee, newsprint paper from Newfoundland to Atlanta, peat moss from Holland to North Alabama, canned fruits from the Pacific Coast . . .

By 1939 the nation-wide economic attention that had begun to turn Southward—both for problems and opportunities—was turning in ever greater measures, taught by war and depression to value the more what the South had to offer if its problems were solved—its superior climate, lower living costs, wealth of raw materials, undeveloped human and natural resources, transportation potentialities, adjacence to the great markets of South and Central America, and, most valuable of all, the purchasing power to be developed one day among its own people if their income were improved. Some were saying that the greatest market left for development in all the West Hemisphere was the one to be had in lifting the wealth and income of the South people up to the national average, and that for the doing of this there was needed an ever increasing science and self-help on the part of the South and new measures of justice and generosity towards the South on the part of the rest of the country. There was much opinion that the War of 1939, with its closure of many markets to Southern cotton, would put the final touch upon the passing of a king, convincing the South at last that cotton as a principal crop must be surrendered. But there was other opinion that neither the South nor the rest of the country could afford to have cotton replaced as a major crop between the Potomac and the Rio Grande, that if the South did not grow cotton it would grow other things to threaten if not destroy with low cost competition the markets of other parts of the country, and that the real answer to cotton's problem must be increased American consumption, not decreased production.

From a contemporary point of view, the South of 1939 was a South ever more diverse in problems and opportunities and products, a changing South, an advancing South, a "New South"—but in longer history and a more catholic estimate, it was still an eternal South. It was a South upon which the curse of cotton was growing more and more tragic, to which the boon of industry was coming in greater and greater volume, in which the agriculture that was a way of life was being made an ever more scientific way, in which a persisting poverty of man mocked more and more the abiding wealth of natural resource, in which regional self-consciousness and assertiveness were replacing a proud and sentimental sectionalism, in which the most difficult race problem with which any people ever had to deal was getting new intricacies as a result of the improved education of the Negro and the enhanced competition for his vote on the part of the national political parties. It was a South grown famous in football; leading the nation in literature; offering itself more and more to tourists and vacationists; beginning to substitute statesmen for politicians in high office; beginning to conquer pellagra, hookworm, malaria; taking measures against night riders and lynchers; and piling new sacrifice upon old in education's cause. A South of things in process, with evil trends and good ones, but withal a South of things unceasing, things forever stamping a region, forever marking a people.

For the South—yesterday, today and tomorrow—is the Southern land and the way its people love it. It is the climate and what it does to the hearts, bones, blood and bright fancies of Southerners; it is the shore lines, the latitudes and longitudes, the elevations and sea levels, the long summers, the sweet springtimes, the place on the map, the rivers and river beds, the ever multiplying pines, the generousities of rain, the wine-making suns, the heavy moons, the habits of remembering—and what these things make of men and women.

Come industry or agriculture, Spring climbs the ladder of the latitudes each year in Alabama as in DeSoto's day, with azaleas for Mobile and honeysuckle for Muscle Shoals. The tenant farmers live their lives and die, but forever the Mississippi winds and loops its way along the sunrise borders of Arkansas, and all the trees of the temperate zone people the land. The speculators swarm and smother, the booms come and go and come again, but Florida is eternally a coral finger dipped in blue, pointing the mighty Gulf and its stream to a place in the Atlantic. The peach crops fail, the peanut crops win, Scarlet O'Hara comes and goes with the wind, and commerce runs all its branches through Atlanta, but from Lookout to St. Mary's the nine climes of Georgia in spirit ceaseless generations that breathe them. The miners of Harlan strike and are struck down and strike again, but eternally come the suns and stand the hills and run the streams that make Kentucky's whiskies soft, her horses swift, her women fair. Huey Long flashes like a meteor from heaven or hell through all her skies and ends an American incident with his death, but Louisiana lives on, nurtured today as a million years ago by the soils and waters of a continent. Vicksburg is besieged and falls and lifts new towers upon its hills, statesmen and demagogues are rivals each decade in all the commonwealth's arenas, but Mississippi smiles along the mighty river's lip as ever and always, the breeze is soft at Biloxi and the Pascagoula sings to eternity. Brave highways run their ribbons from all the compass points, and decay, and run again, but timelessly the land and sky, the earth and sea, are married in North Carolina, with Mitchell standing

6,684 feet to wed the wide heavens and the waters of Albemarle whispering deathless vows to the land. Great Calhoun leads a way, Fort Sumter is fired upon, Wade Hampton restores a great remainder, the rice planters depart, the cotton mills come, the storied capitol at Columbia is tidied by denizens of a New Deal, but South Carolina makes iodine forever in factories of sun and soil and water. Andrew Jackson, Sam Houston, John Coffee, write their names and go, Cordell Hull advances from Carthage to a world's stage, the volunteers of 1840 are passed by volunteers of 1861, of 1917, but still Tennessee is coursed with a daily sun from the Great Smokies that daily rides the Cumberland Plateau, mounts the Rimlands, gleams on a great returning river, and bows as the land bows to glory on the Memphis bluffs. Twice Italy, half again as big as Germany, larger than France and Bulgaria combined, Texas gets dimensions eternal not from boundary lines of state but from messages of the infinite plains to generation after generation of sons. Oldest of the states, with history that goes from John Smith to Carter Glass and names for every chapter in the long story of America, Virginia is older yet in daughterhood to stars in the Shenandoah, in scent of honeysuckle on the James, smile of God upon the York.

The eternal South! The South which makes the men, the history, the ways and days, the problems and opportunities, the advances and retreats, the progress, growth, songs, traditions that are compounded in its name! That is the South to which this volume belongs. That is the South in which the lives of achievement here recorded have been lived.

Alabama

During the year 1944 it seemed that Alabama was engaged in a mammoth contest between agriculture and industry to see which could make the greater progress in a given length of time. It was a friendly contest, for farmers and business men were showing closer cooperation and better understanding of each other's problems than ever before.

As a normally agricultural state, industry in Alabama had a long way to go to make itself felt in a big way, but the demands of the war supplied the necessary incentive. As a result Alabama has never in so short a period witnessed such expansion of its industrial and business institutions as has occurred during the years the war has made such huge requirements.

Already Alabama is engaged in the study of retaining the new and expanded industries that have come, and in laying the groundwork for conversion of new war plants to peacetime uses. They include a wide range of industrial endeavor. There are great chemical plants and aluminum plants in the north, the huge ferrous metals industries of the Birmingham district, the ammunition plants in the eastern part of the state, the aviation units of which Montgomery is the center, the ship-building along the coast. These and many more have created payrolls during the war period which Alabama scarcely dreamed of attaining a few years ago. And now it does not require excessive optimism to envisage these payrolls as a permanent feature of our Alabama way of life.

No less important has been the expansion of agriculture. In three years the whole face of Alabama's countryside has taken on a new appearance as diversification makes its steady advance and cotton steps further into the background.

Experiment and research are showing the way, both in industry and in agriculture. Thousands of acres that were formerly in cotton are now pasture lands and Montgomery county, for example, which used to produce 17,000 bales of cotton, now has 70,000 head of cattle grazing on those former cotton lands.

The Wiregrass region as the Southeastern section of the state is called has changed from cotton to peanuts and the new crop is proving most profitable both for the oil it produces, the meal it processes for stockfeed and the forage crop the peanut hay affords.

The story is much the same from one end of the state to the other. The Tennessee Valley area is a very different place since the Tennessee Valley Authority has pointed the way to so many new and different sources of wealth for the farmer.

The State Chamber of Commerce has become a center of all kinds of effort in the state's behalf, and at its headquarters in Montgomery there are almost daily meetings of men and women from all parts of the state, each engaged in some individual and particular effort which it is desired to bring into harmony and unity with the efforts of others. This organization has become one of the leading sources of information for facts about the state, its history, the activities of business establishments, the data with regard to farms. It has become the nucleus from which is evolving a new day in the state.

For those who are not familiar with the main facts here is a brief summary of Alabama's early history. According to legend, centuries ago when America was a trackless wilderness, a band of Indian braves looking for a location for their tribal village, after wandering for days came upon a land of such majestic forests, such an abundance of game, and so mild a climate that they ended their quest with the happy cry, "Alabama", a very inclusive word in the Indian language meaning, "This is our home land. We will clear the thickets and plant our seed. Here we rest."

Alabama's aboriginal inhabitants were Indians of the Cherokee, Creek, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Tribes. The territory was explored by the Spanish soldier, Hernando DeSoto in 1540, but there was no permanent, white settlement until a colony of French under the leadership of Sir Iberville LeMoyne, a French naval officer, settled on Mobile Bay in 1711.

During the regime of France (about 1700-1763), England (1763-1783), and Spain (in the southern portion, 1783-1819), the white population was very sparse and chiefly confined to the vicinity of Mobile Bay. It was not until after the War of 1812 that the white population predominated.

On March 1, 1817, the Alabama Territory was organized and William Wyatt Bibb appointed Governor. St. Stephens was designated as the temporary seat of government and two sessions of the Territorial Legislature was held there. The First Constitutional Convention was held in Huntsville 1819, and Alabama was admitted to the Union as a state on December 14, 1819. The Territorial Legislature, however, had chosen Cahaba as a site for the first Capital of the state and the second session of the Legislature was held there in 1820, the first having met in Huntsville. Cahaba proved an injudicious selection and in 1827 the Capital was moved to Tuscaloosa, where it remained until permanently located in Montgomery in 1847.

A significant event in the history of the state was the removal of the Creek Indians west of the Mississippi River as a result of the Indian War of 1836-37.

On January 11, 1861, Alabama seceded from the Union. On February 18, 1861, Jefferson Davis of Mississippi was inaugurated president of the Confederate States of America at Montgomery, the Capital of the Confederacy. War between the states continued from 1861 through 1865.

For the next decade Alabama passed through the difficult period of Reconstruction, which drew to a close in 1874 when the Legislature appointed a commission to adjust the state's war debt. In 1880 the state's population, according to the Federal Census was 1,262,505.

Alabama has 200 types of soil. Her rich agricultural lands are capable of producing practically every grain and staple crop of the temperate zone, along with cotton and many vegetables and fruits peculiar to a Southern climate.

Agriculture has long been the foremost industry in Alabama. In fact, 71.9 per cent of the population of the state is rural and dependent upon agriculture for a livelihood, 50.6 per cent actually living on the farm.

Alabama, according to the latest U. S. Farm Census produces in volume more than one hundred different farm crops. Wheat and alfalfa in the northern portion, cotton and corn over the entire state, potatoes, peanuts, hay, small fruits, melons, cane, pecans, tung oil, nuts, satsumas, early truck—all can be grown with profit.

Significant developments are being made in the state in diversified and more stable agriculture. Beef cattle dairy cows, hogs, poultry, peanuts, truck crops, fruit and tobacco are being promoted on acres taken out of cotton; bankers, industrialists and business leaders throughout the state cooperating in this forward movement.

Alabama's geographical position, proximity to the Gulf of Mexico, elevation of highlands, dependable rainfall and prevailing winds guarantee a moderation and variety of climate practically ideal.

Alabama's mild temperature and comparatively uniform climate make possible a long growing season for agricultural products and a lower cost for industrial operations, and less expensive housing and clothing for its people.

The normal annual temperature for the state is 63.9 degrees F. and the annual rainfall 53.87 inches.

The average annual temperature ranges from 60 degrees F. in the northern part of the state to 67 degrees near the coast and the growing season (period between killing frosts) correspondingly from 190 days in the northern portion of the state to 300 days in the southern.

Rainfall is ample for agricultural needs and generally well distributed through the year.

From herds of pure bred cattle—prime meat from Alabama now moves to world markets. Stockyards and modern packing plants offer a market for this growing industry. More than $6,000,000 of livestock passes annually through Union Stock Yards in Montgomery, Alabama's largest yard.

Pasture lands offering nine months of grazing have made possible a great dairy industry which produces quantities of A-Grade milk for local consumption. An increasing production of milk is finding a market in condensaries and cheese and butter plants which are increasing in Alabama.

Hog production is rapidly increasing. Alabama's peanut hams and bacon are pleasing the nation's taste. Poultry raising is playing an important part in the diversified farm program of the state.

Alabama, with approximately 20,185,000 acres of forest land, has approximately 26 billion board feet. Of this amount 13 billion board feet is hardwood and about 13 billion board feet is pine and miscellaneous softwoods. The state's present virgin timber stand amounts to about 1,500,000 acres and is found in tracts of varying extent throughout the state.

The forest and wood-using industries of Alabama are well-developed, twenty per cent of the wage earners of the state making their living in these enterprises.

There are approximately 2,700 sawmills in Alabama, varying from the small, portable tractor mill to the most modern and scientifically managed production plant. Of this number 1900 are in more or less continuous production. It is estimated that the current, annual lumber cut of the state totals 2,200,000,000 board feet.

A total of 31 minerals occur in the state in quantity sufficient for commercial development. Chief among these are coal, iron, limestone, clay, graphite, marble, manganese, silica, bauxite, and gravel. The Alabama coal mining industry is one of the most important in the state, employing approximately 20,000 men and producing over 12,000,000 tons annually. Coal reserves are practically unlimited. More than 4,000,000 tons of iron ore are mined annually to feed the blast furnaces of Alabama's great iron and steel industry. The largest vein of marble in the world is in Alabama and Alabama marble is nationally known. It is particularly valuable for interior work on account of its fine texture and beautiful veining. Building stone from Alabama quarries is used in the finest construction throughout the country. A wide variety of clays offer an opportunity for the ceramic industry and one of the three greatest deposits of pure silica in America is in Alabama. The limestone deposits are the basis of two major industries—lime and cement.

Alabama is one of the three states in the Union having a full time county health officer in every county. Each of Alabama's 76 county health departments takes care of the particular health problems of the community it serves.

Alabama has advanced from a purely agricultural state to one of industrial importance largely within the past thirty years. More than 1800 manufacturing and mining operations in the state employ approximately 120,000 people and the value of products manufactured and mined exceeds $500,000,000 annually.

Textiles, iron and steel take the lead as major industries in the state. Blast furnaces and rolling mills center around the iron, coal, and limestone deposits of the Birmingham district. Alabama is the largest producing state in the manufacture of cast iron pipe, making about fifty per cent of that produced in the United States.

An important and growing activity is the by-products industry, concentrated in the Birmingham area, which processes a wide variety of products from coal and coal tar. Other large industries include foundries and machine shops, railway shops, fertilizer manufacture, cotton seed products, food products, machinery, cement and chemicals.

A coal reserve of 66,711,378,260 tons yielding an annual production of 12,000,000 tons is available to industries in Alabama.

Several million tons of coke are produced annually in Alabama coke ovens.

In addition to coal gas production in many local plants scattered over the state, there is a production of approximately 200,000,000 cubic feet per day of by-product gas in the coke making plants.

Natural gas for domestic and industrial service is available at principal points throughout the state furnished from a giant distribution system which brings this gas from the gas fields of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Alabama ranks fourth among the states in hydro-electric power production, of which the supply is abundant and the rates reasonable for industry and for home.

Fifteen standard railway systems and twelve secondary lines comprising more than 5,000 miles of track serve all sections of Alabama. Forty-three hundred miles of paved highways facilitate the operation of motors and trucks and a paved highway system throughout the state is rapidly nearing completion. All highway bridges in Alabama are free.

Sixteen hundred miles of navigable rivers provide water transportation for the state, second to none in the United States. Alabama is traversed and served by two major air transport routes providing regular day and night mail and passenger schedules. Important interstate bus lines and freight carriers serve all parts of the state.

Mobile Harbor joining the Gulf of Mexico consists of Mobile Bay and part of Mobile River. The Port of Mobile has one of the largest systems of publicly owned warehouses and docks on the Gulf of Mexico.

The ship channel is maintained by the U. S. Engineers with a minimum depth of 32 feet and a minimum width of 300 feet. The channel on the outer bar is 36 feet deep and 450 feet wide.

Facilities of the State Docks were built at a cost of more than $12,000,000. These facilities in addition to the most modern arrangement of piers, warehouses and switch tracks, include a large cold storage plant, quick freezing plant, and fruit terminal, a bulk material handling plant, and special equipment for handling heavy cargo.

Of national and worldwide fame are the Azalea Trail and Bellingrath Gardens at Mobile, attracting thousands of visitors and tourists each year. Citizens of Mobile cooperating have made possible the Azalea Trail and private gardens throughout the city have been developed as a part of this Trail.

Alabama is rich in recreational facilities. Its forests, mountains, lakes and seashore afford opportunity for every type of diversion and sport. It is one of the best of hunting and fishing states. Lakes, rivers, and the Gulf front have an excellent supply of fish; while forests, farm areas, and river bottoms abound in deer, turkey, squirrel, quail, doves, and other wild game. Sports lovers from far and near hunt and fish in Alabama and attend the state's annual Deep Sea Rodeo each August and the field trials held each year.

There are 5,326 schools in Alabama, lands and buildings valued at $48,578,745. A compulsory education law requires all children between the ages of seven and sixteen to attend school, unless obviously disqualified. The percentage of illiteracy has decreased rapidly with increasing density of population, growth of cities, and improvement of school facilities.

Principal State institutions of higher learning are the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa; Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn; and Alabama College at Montevallo. In addition to these there are four state teacher colleges and one state normal school. Private and denominational institutions include Birmingham-Southern College and Howard College in Birmingham; Huntingdon College in Montgomery; Spring Hill College at Mobile; Judson College at Marion; St. Bernard College in Cullman; Athens College at Athens; and Marion Institute at Marion.

Negro colleges include Tuskegee Institute at Tuskegee; Miles Memorial College at Birmingham; Talladega College at Talladega; Selma University at Selma; and State Teachers College at Montgomery.

Alabama has fifteen State Parks and two State Monuments comprising more than 24,000 acres characterized by scenic beauty, historic monuments, and recreational features.

From the crest of the Cheaha Mountain, 2,400 feet above sea level, to Gulf Park, on the southernmost shores of Baldwin County overlooking the Gulf of Mexico, one may find every type of scenery, climate and recreation. Waterfalls, gorges, forests, mountains, white sandy beaches, picturesque lakes, rivers—all in varying degrees of splendor and majesty—are here to entice the outdoor lovers.

Alabama's park properties were constructed by the Civilian Conservation Corps under direction of the National Park Service and represent an investment of millions of dollars. Unlike the thickly populated states in other sections of the country, Alabama's outdoors offers unlimited opportunities to enjoy Nature in solitude and quietness if one so desires.

There are miles and miles of running streams and acres of fresh water lakes. Boats are available at nearly all the parks and one can fish to his heart's content. Miles of excellent trails wind over the hillsides, through cool forests and beside clear streams. Quiet furnished cabins in the mountain and on the Gulf offer an ideal place to spend a restful vacation.

Alabama's population trend during the past 120 years is shown by the following figures of the federal census:

Census year	Population
1820.....	127,901
1830.....	309,527
1840.....	590,756
1850.....	771,623
1860.....	964,201
1870.....	996,992
1880.....	1,262,505
1890.....	1,513,401
1900.....	1,828,697
1910.....	2,138,697
1920.....	2,348,174
1930.....	2,646,248
1940.....	2,832,961

Alabama's valuations for tax purposes have shown the following changes since the days of Reconstruction:

Year	Valuation of property
1881.....	$ 152,920,115.14
1891.....	275,316,491.23
1901.....	288,657,737.00
1911.....	541,764,488.00
1921.....	952,602,224.00
1931.....	1,187,869,702.00
1941.....	1,019,729,935.00

The whole life of Alabama has been profoundly affected by the war, and the relation between the economic conditions produced by the conflict and the conditions which will exist in the post-war period has engaged the best minds of the state. In mid-summer 1943 there was issued by the Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Alabama a volume called "War comes to Alabama" in which prominent men and women analyze the war's impacts on the state and draw conclusions for the future. Governor Chauncey Sparks wrote the foreword to the series and his conclusions are in these words:

"Other wars have been followed by brief booms, which then have given way to serious depressions. This war will be no exception, unless we choose by the exercise of vision and courage to make an exception of it. If we let events take their unbridled course, the end of the war may bring victory accompanied by human want and degradation worse than defeat sustained on the field of battle. But if we plan well now and execute our plans with daring and dispatch, the post-war period can be one of happiness and continued prosperity for our people."

BLUE AND GRAY ASSOCIATION

The Blue and Gray Cradle Association Inc., was organized in 1937 by the late Mayor William A. Gunter of Montgomery. Its primary purpose was to cement friendship between the North and the South, and Montgomery, as the first capital of the Confederacy, and a deep South city, rich in the traditions of Dixie, was regarded as the most appropriate place to designate as the home of the annual championship football game between the Blue and Gray teams picked from the North and the South.

President of the organization at this time is Mayor Cyrus B. Brown, while Brigadier General William P. Screws, associate commissioner of the city of Montgomery is secretary-treasurer, and these city officials are so enthusiastic about the annual game and its possibilities for their city as well as for its effectiveness in bringing the finest athletes of the North and South together once a year, that they are the warmest supporters of the Blue and Gray Cradle association.

The games which have already been played have been gala affairs, and the gridiron contest itself is only a part of the annual events in this connection. The games have brought to Montgomery the commander of the Grand Army of the Republic and the commander-in-chief of the United Confederate Veterans, as well as scores of survivors of the Civil war conflict, their descendants, their sponsors and friends, in contests and social entertainments of many kinds. On the day of the game there is usually a giant parade in which floats representing the cities of the state, bands from the state's many schools, marching clubs and various organizations participate in making it one of the most colorful and entertaining occasions seen in the South.

War times have naturally made certain restrictions upon the annual events, but all have been carried on with the usual enthusiasm so far as possible, and with the full participation of the people of Montgomery and those able to reach the city from distant points.

It is looked upon in normal times as providing a very happy opportunity for putting the city in festive mood and for the South to play host for a time to thousands of visitors who come from far and near.

Montgomery is fortunate in having a large stadium, Cramton Bowl, in which this annual football event can be played, and the past attendance has resulted in considerable enlargements already being made in this entertainment arena.

Florida

Florida was "discovered" Easter Sunday, March 27, 1513, by the Spaniard, Ponce de Leon in his search for the "Fountain of Perpetual Youth." It is the southeasternmost point of the United States, bounded on the north by Georgia and Alabama; on the east by the Atlantic ocean; on the south by the Straits of Florida; and on the west by the Gulf of Mexico and Alabama. It is claimed that it is the fastest growing state in the union, and unquestionably it has had a magnificent growth, especially the larger cities. Miami is perhaps the greatest tourist center in the state, but all of the cities have their hotels full in the winter season, the tourists being attracted to Florida by reason of its warm climate and sunshine.

Next to Miami and Miami Beach comes Jacksonville and Tampa, the three largest cities in the state, but there are other large and thriving cities like Daytona Beach, Panama City, Pensacola, Fort Lauderdale, Lakeland, Orlando, St. Petersburg, Tallahassee, West Palm Beach, etc.

Florida has more sunshine in winter and less in summer than the Northern States. In Florida the shortest day in the year is only about three hours shorter than the longest day; along the northern border of the United States there is a difference of more than seven hours. This, in part, accounts for the mildness of Florida winters and the coolness of Florida summers. The Gulf Stream brushes the southeastern shore of the State and also modifies the climate.

Florida is the land of romance, legend, song and story, from "Way Down Upon the Suwannee River" to "The Over-Sea Route Along the Keys," and from Perdido's bordered valley to St. Augustine's templed shrines.

It is bathed in the passionate caresses of the southern sun, laved by the limpid waves of the embracing seas, wooed by the glorious Gulf Stream, whose waters, warmed by the tropical sun, speed northeastward to temper the climate of Europe.

An emerald kingdom by southern seas, fanned by zephyrs laden with ozone from stately pines, watered by copious libation, decked with palm and pine, flower and fern, clothed in perpetual verdure and lapt in the gorgeous folds of the semi-tropical zone.

Florida leads the nation in the production of grapefruit, celery, Fullers' earth and phosphate (84% of U. S. production), and in winter-grown crops we rank first in producing tomatoes, snap beans, eggplant, cucumbers, peppers, and Irish potatoes. Our waters yield about 137,000,000 pounds of fish yearly. Florida grows a greater variety of food products throughout the year than any other State and there are still ten million acres of farm land yet to be developed in the "Sunshine State"!

Shipping to and from every quarter of the globe passes through Florida's busy ports.

More than 90 per cent of the population of the United States can reach Florida within 48 hours.

Florida contains 35,000,000 acres—four times larger than Holland and larger than Main, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island. The peninsula state has almost 1,500 miles of coast line and 30,000 lakes.

The mean annual temperature ranges from 68.8 to 72.3.

The average annual rainfall is 52.4 inches.

Florida contains a greater variety of scenic beauty than can be found anywhere else within the same limits of area.

The mineral resources are showing possibilities of expansion in new lines of utilization.

The value of our manufactured products in 1906 was $25,000,000 and in 1937 it was $175,000,000.

The total foreign trade of South America is $3,000,000,000. The United States has half the tonnage with the western coast of the continent. Florida's foreign tonnage of 10,000,000 should double in a few years.

The progress of the state during the last twenty years has proved that still greater progress is in store, for the reason that our natural resources in the past were only partially developed and further development is in our program.

From a population of 528,542 in 1900 we now have 1,800,000 citizens. Our agricultural output has grown from $14,612,000 in 1914 to $150,000,000 and this on only one-sixth of the land of the state.

Florida is a vast agricultural empire with Citrus as King and Vegetables Queen, and with a retinue of general agricultural crops and tropical fruits that is truly amazing.

Production of citrus fruit in Florida for the past five seasons runs from 40 to 50 million boxes representing an estimated gross value of from $50,000,000 to $68,000,000.

The production of non-citrus fruits, season 1939-40, was 10,293 car-loads, with a value of $4,776,335. Vegetable production was 65,151 cars, valued at $37,962,385. A total production of all fruits and vegetables of 184,563 cars, with a gross value of $93,103,847.

The estimated value of Florida's investment in the citrus industry is $500,000,000, and gives employment to more than 110,000 men either full or part time. A citrus grove is brought into bearing within a period of five to six years, with a life span of 30 to 50 years.

No State in the Union surpasses Florida in the production of winter vegetables, 60 different kinds being credited to her commercial gardens, with 75 different kinds of nuts and fruits grown commercially. This includes a few tropical fruits, a great variety of which are produced in non-commercial quantities except for local consumption. Scores of crops can be grown in Florida that cannot be grown in other states.

From 400,000 acres of cultivated land Florida ships an average of 21 cars of produce every hour, day and night, 24 hours, every day in the year.

For the benefit of her agriculturists Florida provides 28 State-owned markets—non-profit. There are five Home Industries markets.

Our Farmers markets are furnishing an avenue for selling their products never before provided the farmer. The Plant City market in Hillsborough County handled over $2,000,000 worth of farm products in 1940.

Staple farm crops in north and central Florida include corn, cotton (both long and short staple), tobacco, peanuts, oats, rye, velvet beans, cowpeas, soybeans, and numerous other feeds and forage crops of lesser importance. The annual value of these crops is around $30,000,000.

Sugar cane is another important crop, both for syrup and sugar. The largest sugar mill in the United States is located at Clewiston. A smaller mill and sugar refinery is operated at Fellsmere.

Great improvement has been made in the quality and value of range and feeder cattle in Florida in the past few years, with a present value of well over $20,000,000. Thousands of acres of improved pastures have been established and large areas of range lands are being fenced.

The value of livestock has increased immensely because of tick eradication, the improvement of cultivated pastures and the introduction of thoroughbred cattle both for beef and for dairies.

The annual income from the production of hogs to Florida farmers is around $5,000,000.

The value of poultry and eggs produced amounts to around $10,000,000 annually.

Florida dairies produce an income of from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 per year. Many of these dairies have some of the finest dairy cattle and equipment to be found anywhere in the country.

Florida with 328 species leads all Southern States in variety of native trees. Texas is second with 198; North Carolina third with 166.

Vast forests of pine, oak, cypress and other trees, both hard and soft woods, dot the entire State, affording retreats for game and rare birds and restful contemplation for the visitor.

Many foreign trees have been introduced and thrive. Of the 300 species of palms, some are native to Florida. The Royal palm is said to be the most beautiful tree in the world. Mahogany, the Banyan, the Sausage tree, the Breadfruit tree and many others are grown in the southern part of Florida. The rare Torreya tree is found in Torreya State Park in Liberty County.

The Tung tree, imported from China, is producing oil in commercial quantities. Used in paints, varnishes, lacquers and waterproofing.

Ninety per cent of the world's supply of naval stores (turpentine and rosin) is produced in the U. S. Approximately one-third of this is produced in Florida.

Lumber of various kinds is produced in millions of board feet.

There are five woodpulp mills operating in the State; two at Fernandina, one each at Jacksonville, Port St. Joe and Panama City, and one under construction at Cantonment.

There are two noted trees in Florida: The Big Oak, Jacksonville with a 200-foot spread of branches, and the Big Cypress, Longwood, estimated to be 3,000 years old.

Forest products in Florida produce an annual value of $40,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Income from Spanish moss amounts to $1,000,000 per year.

Wild game of various types are more or less abundant in all sections of the State. In the vast forests and undeveloped sections of the State may be found deer, bears, wild turkeys, foxes, wildcats, coons, "possums" and squirrels. In the fastnesses of the Everglades panthers and other game are still to be found, while in the more open sections and in the fields quail and dove offer the hunter ample opportunity to display his sportsmanship. Ducks are to be found on many of the lakes and rivers, and geese are at times quite plentiful at points on the north Gulf Coast.

Sports fishing along nearly 1500 miles of Gulf and sea coast present the angler with an unlimited opportunity to display his prowess. The two most prized and largest sport fish are the sailfish and the tarpon or Silver King. Many varieties of salt water fish are obtainable in these waters.

Fresh water fish are abundant in the 30,000 lakes and many miles of rivers within the States' boundaries. The large mouth black bass is the fresh water angler's choice as a sports fish. These bass often are caught weighing from 10 to 15 pounds. Many other species of fish are to be found in the lakes and rivers. In all, over 600 species of fish are to be found in and around the State.

Commercial fishing, including shell fish and the sponge industry, brings a gross return of about $10,000,000 annually.

Florida offers her visitors a choice of almost anything on the calendar from a quiet camp on the bank of a stream or lake where the only sounds are the trickle of the stream, the lapping of the waves, the sighing of the breeze and the call of the birds, to the hectic night life of the larger resort cities and the race tracks.

Resort towns and cities vie with each other in providing entertainment for their guests. Provisions are made for outdoor sports, including golf, polo, tennis, shuffleboard, badminton, motoring, fishing, hunting, etc.

The many ocean and Gulf beaches, as well as inland lakes and private and public bathing pools, provide unlimited opportunity to enjoy both salt and fresh water bathing and water sports.

From Old Man Pelican, that homely creature, who is immortalized in a limerick to the tiny hummingbird, whose flight is too swift to be followed by the human eye, Florida is hostess to millions of birds.

The first bird sanctuary in the United States was established on Pelican Island, near Sebastian, Florida, March 14, 1903. Today the most beautiful sanctuary is at Bok Tower, near Lake Wales—said to be the most beautiful spot in the United States.

According to Audubon, the mocking bird, the Florida State Bird, is the most beautiful singer in all birddom. It not only imitates but composes, and has been known to change its song eighty-seven times within seven minutes. A record unequalled.

In the extreme southern part of the State the rarer birds have their homes and hold their conventions. Cranes stalk majestically through the shallow waters of the Everglades, darting their long necks swiftly at some tidbit that swims near. The colorful flamingo, whose beautiful red and pink plumage looks like an immense rose from a distance, is almost extinct (little thanks to the plumage hunters), but can still be found. The lacy feathers of the white egret offer a pleasing contrast to the more colorful birds. The snowy plumage of the white ibis makes the trees, from a distance, look like that beautiful bush, the snow ball. But you will have to see them to enjoy them.

More than 3,000 varieties is the estimate placed on the number of flowering plants grown in the Land of Flowers. Probably the full name given to this region by Ponce de Leon, when he landed near what is now St. Augustine, on April 2, 1513, was Tierra Florida—land of flowers. But he could have no conception of the vast range of floral beauty he had discovered, nor the aptness of the name given.

From the gorgeous Royal Poinciana to the Hibiscus, which blossoms without ceasing, on down to the tiniest wild flower that hides its head in the thick grasses of the Everglades, Florida offers a panorama of floral beauty that is unexcelled.

The proposed Everglades National Park, covering the extreme southern tip of Florida, holds surprises almost without number to the winter visitor. Rare air plants, that attach themselves to the stately trees, unfold their beautiful blossoms in artistic beauty.

From an address by Dr. David Fairchild delivered in 1929 before the American Forestry Association: ". . . nowhere in all my experience have I seen a greater number of orchids, or more magnificent specimens, than abound in the hammocks of southern Florida." Dr. Fairchild has introduced more than 20,000 exotic plants into Florida.

Florida Has . . .

7,500 miles of railroads. Almost 8,000 miles of paved roads. . .

A climate that is the envy of the world. . .

A large and rapidly increasing number of fine hotels, apartment houses, tourist homes and camps. . .

The world's largest springs—Silver Springs at Ocala and Wakulla Springs near Tallahassee. . .

The Story of Georgia

BY QUIMBY MELTON

Editor Griffin (Ga.) Daily News

The true story of Georgia is that of a progressive state with unbounded opportunities, rather than a historic review of her past—as interesting and thrilling as such would be.

For no state in the Union faces a brighter future than does Georgia, long known as the Empire State of the South.

But to get the proper background for the Story of Georgia one must turn back the pages of history and review in brief things of yesteryears that have developed Georgia into a favored state.

To properly picture Georgia, one must know that she is the largest state in the South. There are 59,000 square miles within her borders. Georgia embraces mountains, plains and coastal regions.

Georgia was the last of the original 13 colonies that made up infant America. Three hundred years, marked with steady development, but with backsets such as the reconstruction era, failed to dim the determination of Georgians to make their state one of which they and their posterity could well be proud.

Georgia: teeming with natural resources; combining agriculture with industry; a paradise for tourists.

Georgia: a state of homes and schools and churches and people never too busy to be good neighbors and rejoice with the success of friends or sympathize with them in time of disappointment or sorrow.

Georgia: an ideal state in which to live, to work, to play, to rear one's family. Georgia: a state quick to reward those who earn rewards. Georgia: a state that while proud of its traditions and accomplishments in years gone by, does not live with her eyes glued on the past, but rather looking forward to the future and a better, more prosperous Georgia.

One cannot write the Story of Georgia without calling attention to some of the "firsts" that are Georgia's.

The first chartered state university in America was the University of Georgia which received its charter January 27, 1785. The University system today includes dozens of colleges and universities that rank with the best in the nation.

Wesleyan College, Methodist Institute located at Macon, was the first college in the world to grant a degree to women.

The first steamboat to cross the Atlantic left the harbor of Savannah, May 24, 1819.

The first long distance telephone in America was established between Trion and Rome in 1880.

The first machine for manufacturing ice was made in Columbus in 1844.

The first motion picture show to which admission was charged opened in Atlanta in 1895.

It was a Georgian, Dr. Crawford W. Long, who discovered that ether could be used as an anesthetic. He performed the first operation using ether at Jefferson in 1842.

The first orphanage in the world was Bethesda Orphan's Home, opened in Savannah in 1741.

The first Sunday School in the world was organized at Savannah in 1736 by John Wesley.

The first garden club in America was formed at Athens in 1891.

Georgia was the first state in the Union to establish an agricultural experiment station, 1735. This station is now located at Griffin, Ga.

These are just a few of the "firsts" that are credited to Georgia.

Georgia for many years was chiefly an agricultural state but following the turn of the century industry began to flourish in Georgia. Today Georgia counts her varied industries by the thousands. A balanced industrial-agricultural program has done much to bring prosperity to the state.

Textiles are the leading industry of Georgia, but there are other varied industries all adding their part to the general prosperity.

Since America was drawn into the war Georgia industry has devoted much of its facilities to filling orders for Uncle Sam's Army, Navy and Air Corps. The state's shipbuilding yards are turning out vessels in record time; her airplane factories are furnishing fighter and bomber planes for use against the Axis. Hundreds of plants have been converted to make ammunition and other materials of war and Georgia workers, employed in these war plants, are giving unstintedly of their time in keeping their plants up to schedule.

These fine men and women working in Georgia war industries are backing up the hundreds of thousands of fine young men and women who are in the Armed Services. Devotion to the better things of life and to democratic government, a high patriotic sense of duty, has caused hundreds of thousands of Georgians to accept the hardships of war and the dangers of combat with a cheerfulness that is typical of Georgia's young men and women. They fight that Georgia may remain free, that the Georgia of tomorrow may be even a greater Georgia than that of today.

In agriculture Georgia leads the nation in production of peaches, watermelons, peanuts, pimentos, pecans and sweet potatoes. Cotton, tobacco, grains, and vegetables are among her other leading crops.

Georgia farmers are turning more and more to the production of hogs, cattle and poultry.

Not only has Georgia been and is a state of great natural resources but she can list among her assets the contributions to literature of such men and women as Sidney Lanier, Frank L. Stanton, Joel Chandler Harris, Corra Harris, Henry Grady, Harry Stilwell Edwards, John Donald Wade, Margaret Mitchell, W. F. Melton, Robert Loveman and others.

And the story of Georgia would not be complete without referring to such statesmen as Stephens, Crawford, Hill, Toombs, Watson, Hoke Smith, and Speaker Charles F. Crisp.

Nor must one forget that a Georgian invented the sewing machine, and a visitor to Georgia invented the cotton gin. Also one must mention the work of Dr. Charles Herty who through long years of experiment proved that paper products could be made from ordinary slash pine, the sort of pine that grows in Georgia and throughout the south. The work of Dr. Herty has opened a new field for Southern farmers and paper mills, that furnish a market for their pine, are being built in many sections of Dixie.

Georgia is rich in natural resources. Its hills are the source of mining operations that produce marble, granite, bauxite, fullers earth, limestone, lime, asbestos, talc, slate, mica, manganese, coal, iron and even gold. Recent demonstrations have proven that Georgia clay possesses the qualities needed to make the best china and pottery.

Only recently experimental wells have been drilled in Georgia in belief that the coastal regions of Georgia may be the location of some of the nation's richest oil fields.

Chief among Georgia's finest institutions are her public utilities. Georgians have developed a great hydro-electric system that harnesses the streams of the state and turns their energy into power to light our cities and operate our industries. Our railways, our bus and truck lines, our commercial gas companies are well able to provide service for many more people than live in Georgia.

Within recent years a pipe line from the natural gas fields of Louisiana has been built to Georgia and through the state to the coast. This gives Georgians natural gas at a lower figure than old style commercial gas could be bought.

Also within the past few years gasoline carrying pipe lines have been built to and through Georgia providing quick and economical transportation for gasoline.

Georgia has a splendid system of paved highways that connect all sections of the state and furnish roads to markets and from town to town. And Georgia has built this system of highways without issuing any highway bonds. "Pay as you go" has long been the policy of the state and today the highway system is "all paid for" and belongs to the people of the state, not to bond holders.

Georgia is known far and wide as a fine state to visit. And year by year the number of tourists who come to Georgia increases. Good hotels and plenty of interesting spots to visit have made Georgia a favorite with tourists. From the mountains in the north to the seacoast in the south and east Georgia abounds with points of interest.

For instance one who comes to Georgia cannot leave without seeing Stone Mountain, largest solid granite rock in the world. And one certainly must visit the Warm Springs Foundation where much progress is being made in the fight on Infantile Paralysis.

A visit to Fort Benning, near Columbus, is well worthwhile for this is the largest and best equipped Infantry School in the world.

Then one will enjoy the many state and national parks in Georgia, such as the national parks in the northern part of the state and Indian Springs park near the central portion. Georgia's many old towns, where the best in post-bellum architecture can be found, also have proven a drawing card with visitors.

And the historic battlefields near Savannah and Brunswick, the vast reaches of the Okefenokee Swamps, in South Georgia, also are of interest to visitors.

And should one visit Georgia during the spring, when the millions of peach trees are in bloom, one would easily imagine he was right in the middle of fairyland.

Georgia today is a veritable paradise for sportsmen, those who like to hunt and fish. For her streams are stocked with game fish and her fields and forests abound with game.

"From the Hills of Habersham to the Marshes of Glynn" one with gun or rod will find plenty of hunting and fishing. And visiting sportsmen are always welcomed to Georgia.

Georgia is proud, and justly so, of her schools, her colleges and her universities. The State University System, with branches in every section of the state, the various private schools and colleges, and the many church owned colleges and schools, offer educational advantages that cannot be surpassed. Many people living in states where the climate is not as pleasant the year round as in Georgia are sending their sons and daughters to Georgia colleges and universities. And many of these finding out first hand what a great state Georgia is, remain here, after graduation to become part and parcel of Georgia.

But busy, thriving, forward-looking Georgia's greatest asset is not her natural resources, not her sea ports, not her prosperous industries or well tilled farms, but her people—her men and women and children. People who love their state; people who believe in Georgia. People who welcome newcomers to Georgia and quickly make them "home folk."

It's these citizens of Georgia who have seen thousands of their sons and daughters, husbands and brothers, wives and daughters, march away to war and into the war plants of the nation. They have gladly sent the very cream of their manhood and womanhood out to undergo the hardships of war and to run the risks of war that Georgia, along with the rest of the nation may remain free and that equal opportunity for all shall be real.

It's these citizens of Georgia who are doing all within their power to keep Georgia a clean, God-fearing state despite the effects of a world at war, so when our men and women return home they will find a state worth their efforts. These citizens of Georgia, who remain at home hope and expect our returning soldiers, sailors and marines, to take over the business affairs of our state and make Georgia even a more prosperous and glorious state than she has ever been.

Georgia looks to the future confident that the coming years shall be the finest Georgia has ever experienced. Georgia knows she possesses assets that few states can equal and believes the next decade will see Georgia set the pace in national progress.

Georgia today has dozens of Army camps located within her borders and many of the men training in these camps, enjoying Georgia's fine weather and Georgia's splendid hospitality, will no doubt decide to make their home in Georgia, after the glorious victory has been won. And Georgians will welcome these men as citizens.

There's room in Georgia for every man or woman who wants to live here and play a part in the development of our great state.

The State of Georgia is justly proud of her fine newspapers. Whether they be the large metropolitan dailies, the dailies in the smaller cities, or weekly newspapers all have earned the reputation of putting the common good of their community and state ahead of selfish interests. In the past Georgia has had many distinguished newspaper editors but none who worked any more untiringly for the state and their community than the men and women who now edit Georgia newspapers.

Georgia, looking forward, believing in her future, having faith in her young men and women, is girding herself to march forward. Georgia will welcome those from other states who would like to become Georgians, make their homes here, establish their businesses here, and become part and parcel of the Empire State of the South.

Louisiana Produces For War

By REX LANEY

*Department of Commerce and Industry
State of Louisiana*

Compared with the large industrial states of the northern and eastern sections of the nation, Louisiana, with its population of only 2,209,000 is small. Yet it already has turned an enormous quantity of diversified war materials into the stream of war production, and is just now becoming geared to achieve its maximum quotas.

This production is better appreciated, too, when it is realized that Louisiana is essentially a producer state, and not a processing one. Our prominence in the commercial field in past years has been due principally to our agricultural production—cotton, sugarcane, rice, corn, and vegetables; and the recovery of our extensive mineral resources, such as petroleum, salt, sulphur, and limestone. Nevertheless, we have kept pace, and sometimes even taken the lead, in the general industrial progress that has been made in the southern United States during the last decade.

The past five years alone have seen Louisiana gain more than 200 new manufacturing plants, representing $500,000,000 in capital investment, and new jobs for more than 200,000 Louisiana workers. This development has included the construction of scores of new industries, such as chemical factories, petroleum and natural gas plants, paper and pulp mills, building material factories, and food products plants. 1384384

Much of this industrial development, of course, has been due to the war and its great demands, which could only be met by the creation of additional industries. For a considerable period before the war, however, our state was definitely on the road to full development of its industrial raw materials and resources, and was enjoying unprecedented expansion in many fields.

When the war began all our efforts, in both agriculture and industry, were immediately shifted to production for war needs.

Let us look for a moment at what constitutes Louisiana's war production. From an agricultural standpoint our state is one of the most diversified in the nation. On its 151,000 farms which cover 6,000,000 fertile acres, there can be produced abundantly almost every plant or vegetable that grows in North America.

Following is a partial list of products raised in the state, and the amount of their annual production: Cotton, 750,000 to 1,000,000 bales; sugar 400,000,000 pounds; cane syrup, 5,000,000 gallons; molasses, 15,000,000 gallons; peanuts, 350,000 bushels; Irish potatoes, 2,700,000 bushels; sweet potatoes, 8,500,000 bushels; oats, 800,000 bushels; corn, 25,000,000 bushels; rice, 20,000,000 bushels; tobacco, 400,000 pounds; hay, 350,000 tons; oranges, 200,000 boxes; strawberries, 3,500 carloads; fruits and vegetables, 15,000 carloads; beef cattle, 1,800,000; hogs, 820,000; dairy cattle, 350,000; sheep, 150,000; other livestock, 300,000 head.

These abundant harvests of food, feed, and fiber crops are figuring importantly in national agricultural production which is the very backbone of both our military and industrial forces.

Next to agriculture, Louisiana's most important industry is petroleum refining. Since 1935 the value of our annual oil production has more than doubled, and we have risen from fifth to third producing state. Every year more than 100,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum flows into the refineries of our own and other states. Income from Louisiana's oil and its by-products, such as natural gas, gasoline, and carbon black, each year amounts to more than $125,000,000.

In an "oil war" as this is appropriately called, the value of petroleum is incalculable. We are fortunate that we have enough oil not only to respond generously to the nation's needs, but also, a sufficiency of reserves to carry us as a leading oil state long after the war is over.

Our oil production has also engendered another vastly important industry in our state—rubber manufacturing. In the words of William Jeffers, U. S. rubber administrator, Louisiana is "the cradle of America's synthetic rubber industry". Here were constructed the first synthetic rubber plants in the nation, and already they are producing importantly for war needs.

And after the war, if synthetic rubber has proved sufficiently practical to supplant the natural product, our state, which has a virtually unlimited supply of oil and gas from which butadiene is taken, would be capable of producing at least 25 percent of the nation's rubber needs.

Equally important, or more so, to the war effort, is an unfailing supply of high octane aviation gasoline. Since the United States entered the war, special high octane units have been added to four of Louisiana's refineries. The critical value of 100 octane gasoline to the Allied air forces is obvious. Its margin of added speed to warplanes may well spell the difference between victory and defeat in the air.

Sulphur is a product so widely used in industry that the rate of its consumption is an accurate gauge of business activity, and Louisiana has endless deposits of sulphur. Indispensable to manufacturing even in peace time, sulphur rivals oil in importance as a war commodity. It is widely employed in the form of sulphuric acid in making steel for armor plate, tanks and guns, and for producing gasoline as fuel for mechanized units. Sulphur is also used in the vulcanizing of rubber for tires, and indirectly in the making of chemicals, fertilizers, paint, paper, film, and an endless list of other valuable war products.

Vital to the war effort also is chlorine, made from salt or salt brine, of which Louisiana produces enormous quantities. Salt is also used in making muriatic acid and sodium sulphate. Muriatic acid is used in the manufacture of magnesium and tin, and also in the chemical, oil, steel, carbon, and food products industries. Salt cake, made from salt and sulphur, is used almost entirely in the manufacture of pulp and paper, which industries are diverting the major portion of their products to war requirements.

But every ounce of food, every gallon of gasoline, every cartridge and shell, every article of clothing or equipment produced in Louisiana is useless to the war effort if it remains here. Some part of all our production is of course for use in defense of the Continental United States and our allies of the Western Hemisphere. The great majority of this war material, however, as well as our soldiers and their equipment, must be transported over long sea routes to the various theatres of battle before they become directly effective in the fight against our enemies.

To perform this gigantic task of transportation requires ships—many ships—and Louisiana has an important share in producing them. Scores of merchant ships built in Louisiana's several major yards since the war's outbreak are now in service at sea, and scores of others are building. We are proud to have contributed substantially to the almost incredible production record of American shipbuilders since Pearl Harbr.

But our ship production is not to be measured in terms of merchant ships alone. The ingenuity and resourcefulness of Louisiana business men have also had a part in producing war craft. One is the famous Higgins shallow draft landing boat, which has proved its worth in actual battle conditions in Norway, Greece, the South Pacific, and other battle areas. Other types of war boats, too, are regularly being turned out from Louisiana yards.

Every type of transportation known today is found in Louisiana. Great trunk line railroad systems and many short lines form a network within its boundaries; 15,525 miles of highways serve every community; major airlines, coast wise and intracoastal steamship lines, fleets of common carrier and contract barge lines are other important transportation links. The navigable waterway system of Louisiana aggregates about 5,000 miles, approximately the same as the railroad mileage within its borders.

Then, we have a mammoth timber stand yielding more than one billion board feet of lumber yearly; an enormous annual catch of seafood, such as shrimp, crabs, oysters, and fish; and a production of furs greater than that of any other state in the United States, or any province of Canada.

Louisiana would have great prominence in this development. Already we produce each normal year more than $1,000,000,000 worth of finished goods—one or more products for almost every letter of the alphabet. Petroleum, wallboard, industrial alcohol, cement, salt, condiments, beverages, chemicals, roofing, steel products, paints, carbon, twine, plateglass, and drugs, are only a few of them.

Although war requirements are primarily responsible for most of Louisiana's new chemical industries, it is probable that reaction following the war will not seriously affect the production of these concerns. Each major plant is particularly adapted to immediate change to commodities valuable in peacetime as well as war. An ammonia plant is easily converted into the production of nitrates for fertilizer, while heavy chemicals such as caustics and acids should find ready peacetime markets in the pulp and paper industry, as well as in petroleum refining.

Industrial chemistry, with an abundance of materials close at hand in Louisiana, will without doubt be able to switch to peacetime economy very easily. New chemical industries established in Louisiana now will be permanent installations and an important factor in our future economic security.

Mississippi

By FREDERICK SULLENS

Mississippi, most typical state of the Deep South, was admitted to the Union on December 17th, 1817, and is now in the 126th year of her statehood—barring a four-year period when there was a slight unpleasantness in the sisterhood of states that caused Mississippi to secede from the Union. That unpleasant incident, however, is rarely mentioned nowadays.

At the time of the state's formal admission to the Union the seat of territorial government was in the historic old city of Natchez—a community over which the flags of seven nations have flown.

On February 12th, 1821, less than four years after the state's admission to the Union, the legislative body, in session at Natchez, decided that Natchez was not centrally or conveniently located for a capital and a commission composed of Thomas Hinds, James Patton and William Lattimore was appointed to locate a site for a new capital "within twenty miles of the true center of the state."

Later in 1821 the seat of government was moved to Columbia, Marion county, and on November 28th of that year, upon recommendation of the commission authorized the establishment of a capital to be called Jackson, named in honor of Andrew Jackson, and directed the construction of a building large enough to shelter the legislature.

This first capitol building was erected at what is now the northeast corner of Capitol and President streets, directly across the street from where these lines are now being written. The structure was erected at a cost of $2,000. It was a plain and decidedly ugly two story brick structure. The legislature held its first session therein in December, 1822.

State government evidently managed to wobble along somehow in this building for seventeen years. In 1839 what is now known as the old capitol building was completed and made ready for occupancy. It provided quarters for state officials as well as the legislature and continued in use until the present capitol building, erected at a cost of about one million dollars, was erected on a large square just off the business district that had previously been the site of the penitentiary. The state was just then changing from a leasing system for its convicts to employment on penal farms in the delta—a system that now pays the state a net profit of about a half million dollars each year. The new capitol building was completed in 1903.

Mississippi enjoys the distinction of having two capitol buildings, the old structure at the head of Capitol street having been rehabilitated more than a quarter of a century ago at a cost of $250,000 and shelters several branches of state government. There is now urgent need for more room to house various departments of state government and the erection of a state office building at a cost of one million dollars is one of the subjects being urged for immediate consideration by the legislature.

Many historic events were staged in the old capitol building during the 64 years when it was the domicile of state government. Within its walls was staged a notable reception to Henry Clay and another to Louis Kossuth. The ordinance of secession was passed in the chamber of the House of Representatives, and it furnished setting for the Black and Tan convention, the expulsion of Gov. Benj. Humphreys from office by Federal bayonets during reconstruction days, the impeachment of Gov. Aldebert Ames, carpetbagger Governor, and the last public appearance of Jefferson Davis.

The new capitol building—it has now been in use 40 years—is regarded as one of the finest examples of classic Greek architecture in the world. It was constructed within the time limit specified, without a bond issue, and with no taint of fraud or corruption connected therewith. When the building was dedicated the books of the contractors and the supervising architect balanced to a penny. That's a record to be proud of when there is so much waste, extravagance and corruption in connection with present-day building programs.

An Awakening State

While Mississippi ranks second lowest among states of the Union in per capita wealth, at the same time perhaps no other commonwealth is making more progress in the building of a substantial foundation for future progress and prosperity.

Within the past decade what has been happening in Mississippi is hardly short of a revolution.

More diversified and intensified farming and balancing of agriculture with industry are adding more and more each year to the material welfare of the state and its people.

No longer is Mississippi a one-crop state, relying wholly on cotton for cash income at the close of each farming season.

Outstanding among new avenues of agricultural effort is the development of the live stock industry. Mississippi can today truthfully claim both beef and dairy herds that will compare favorably with the best live stock in the nation. Her hills and valleys are dotted with splendid herds of grazing pure-bred cattle, Jerseys and Herefords being predominant.

Discovery of oil in paying quantities in Yazoo county four years ago, followed by oil finds in Sharkey, Madison, Adams and Wayne county cause geologists to express the belief that this development is only in its infancy, and Mississippi may eventually become one of the large oil-producing states of the nation. The Tinsley oil field, now producing 1,700,000 barrels monthly from 364 wells, is proof positive of the value and permanency of the state's oil field.

It has required a lot of hard work to convince rising generations in Mississippi during the past fifty years that they are entitled to something more than the first value of raw resources; that cotton should be marketed in the form of manufactured cloth instead of raw fibre in bales; that lumber has more value when sold as furniture than as logs or dressed lumber; that they should raise their own foodstuffs and feedstuffs instead of buying heavily from other states; that there is an abundance of resources of many kinds at their feet that need only to be developed; that instead of waiting for foreign capital to come in and exploit these resources and pile up fortunes therefrom our home people should use their own money and energy for this purpose and thus leave a heritage to their own children.

In recent years new types of manufacturing plants have been brought to the state, attracted by tax exemptions and more liberal laws relative to corporations. Conspicuous in this respect have been the garment factories located at a dozen or more points and giving employment at fairly good wages to thousands of women and young girls who would otherwise be without employment. An incandescent lamp factory of General Electric, located in Jackson, the Armstrong tire factory at Natchez, a subsidiary of Sears-Roebuck, and the LeTourneau heavy road machinery plant below Vicksburg now engaged in war production, are among the more outstanding examples of new industries that furnish profitable employment for idle hands and nice wage rolls for the channels of trade.

Much time and effort has been expended to establish this common-sense doctrine of industrial development but it is finally sinking in with wholesome effect.

Essentially Agricultural

Mississippi is essentially an agricultural state, and will doubtless remain so for many generations to come. About 85 per cent of the people derive their living direct from the soil. It is a state without large cities or great manufacturing centers. Jackson, with a population of perhaps 85,000, is the largest city.

Mississippi was settled chiefly by the Scotch, English and Irish pioneers who trekked from Virginia and the Carolinas into the Southwest during the early years of the past century. The population is therefore largely Anglo-Saxon—more so than any state in the Union. There was very little infusion of foreign blood following the years when the great tide of European migratory labor was surging to our shores—mighty little slag in our melting pot, so to speak. Population growth has been slow. A census today would not show more than 2,250,000. Thirty years ago there were fewer people in Mississippi than the number of Israelites who followed Moses in his search for a promised land. A slow but steady migration of negroes to industrial centers in Northern and Eastern states, attracted by high wages, has been a deterrent to growth in population.

Fine Highway System

In no respect has Mississippi shown a spirit of progress more markedly in recent years than in the building of public roads. Within a decade the taxpayers of the commonwealth invested $70,000,000 of their own money in the construction of a permanent highway system, supplemented with about $30,000,000 in Federal funds. The state expenditure is being paid for with a four cent tax on gasoline, divided equally between the Highway Commission and the counties and has thus far been adequate to care for bond and interest payments and maintenance. A splendid farm-to-market system of highways was under construction at the time our country entered the war and will be the first major project resumed after peace is declared.

The Highway Commission has formulated a post-war program of construction, covering a period of three years, and involving a proposed expenditure of $75,000,000 for trunk line highway and farm-to-market roads. The commission anticipates that 75 per cent of the program will be paid for by the Federal government. Legislation on the subject will be proposed during the 1944 session of the lawmaking body.

Promoting Development

Manufacturing is in its infancy in Mississippi. In truth, it can be said that not much more than a substantial foundation has been laid. The total value of manufactured products in the state for 1939, last year for which official statistics are available, was $248,399,713. War production, of course, has greatly increased this volume but the figure fairly represents what might be called normal production.

However, the opportunity for industry is here. Not yet has the surface been well scratched. When post-war adjustments are made and the world gets back to some semblance of normalcy, Mississippi will again be sturdily on her way to a more enduring form of prosperity and more adequate returns from her natural resources.

Many agencies have worked diligently to bring about progress and prosperity in Mississippi, through development of natural resources, and none have been more liberal or secured more substantial results than the railroads, working through their agricultural and industrial bureaus. Their campaigns have been nicely meshed with various state and Federal bureaus and the railroads have been notably successful in getting new industries located along their respective systems. The far-sighted men who head the transportation systems are now planning their post-war programs and they recognize Mississippi, and the South generally, as a land filled with plenty of present and future opportunity. What the railroads have done towards making Mississippi a better state in which to live forms one of the most dramatic chapters in the state's history.

World War II has naturally given a great impetus to every form of business enterprise in the commonwealth. The state's resources have been utilized to the utmost by the government and various industries directly connected with the war effort. However, the state's quotas of army camps, training centers and industrial plants engaged in making materials of war are smaller, on a population basis than those of other Southern states. In one respect, at least, this is fortunate. Mississippi will not be dotted with "ghost towns" after peace is declared and there will be few smokeless chimneys within her borders.

An important phase of the new diversified farm program has been the planting of thousands of acres in South Mississippi in tung orchards that are now producing one of the world's most valuable commercial oils, import of which from China has been shut off by war conditions. That our climate and soil are admirably adapted to rapid and healthy growth of tung trees has been fully proven and much new acreage is being added each year. There are now more than two million nut-bearing trees in three southern counties.

In Good Financial Shape

Each succeeding year shows a marked improvement in the state's educational system and her public schools and colleges will compare favorably, both in character of instruction and physical equipment, with what other Southern states have to offer. Within the past five years more than $15,000,000 has been invested in new school buildings and educational facilities.

Mississippi is one of the few states in the Union where homesteads are exempt from all forms of taxation. Exemption applies to homes up to $5,000 in valuation. There is very little likelihood this law will ever be repealed.

Federal statistics credit Mississippi with the largest birth rate and lowest death rate of any Southern state.

State laws relative to corporations have been radically revised in recent years and are now highly favorable to capitalistic endeavor and industrial expansion.

There has been a steady lowering of the rate of ad valorem of taxation during the past two decades and the rate is now down to two mills on the dollar. The state's chief source of revenue for general government purposes is the retail sales tax. It has been in operation since 1935, and has proven so successful that the beginning of the calendar year of 1944 will show a surplus of about $24,000,000 in the state treasury—a surplus that will probably be saved to meet essential needs after the war has ended.

Population Growth

Mississippi has an area of 47,716 square miles, ranking 31st among the states in territorial area. It has an inland water area of 296 square miles, total water area of 852 square miles and land area of 47,420 square miles.

The state's growth in population has been slow. In 1900 the Federal census show a total of 1,551,270. Totals for the three succeeding decades were:

1910.....	1,797,114	1930.....	2,009,821
1920.....	1,790,618	1940.....	2,183,796

It was between 1910 and 1920 that the heaviest exodus of negroes to Northern and Eastern industrial centers took place and caused a loss of population for the decade.

Overcoming Obstacles

Perhaps no state in the Union has encountered more misfortunes, overcome more obstacles and survived more hardships than has Mississippi. The War between the States left its people prostrate and poverty-stricken. It took more than a half century after the surrender at Appomatox for the state to get on its social and economic feet again. At frequent periods during the interval between 1865 and 1900 yellow fever epidemics paralyzed business and industry and often took heavy toll of human lives. This scourge passed away with discovery of the fact that the disease was transmitted by mosquitoes.

Other diseases were handicaps to development because they sapped human energy. Malaria was a scourge even worse than yellow fever in its devastating effects. Mosquito extermination has reduced that disease to the point where it is no longer a menace. Other energy-sapping diseases were pellagra and hookworm. Both have been exterminated to the point where they are now rarely heard of. Today no state can boast of better health conditions in Mississippi. The commonwealth was once shunned because of its diseases. Now it is popular, and becoming more so each year, as a health resort.

For many years an absurd idea was widely prevalent throughout the nation that Mississippi was a swampy state, consisting chiefly of bogs and bayous covered with miasmatic mists. In truth, the topography shows little in the way of lowlands except the far-famed delta, composed of seventeen counties, and blessed with the richest soil in the world. It is the region where long staple cotton is grown. Possibly some portions of the delta may have been unhealthy a decade or so ago but drainage and mosquito extermination have given that area a low sickness and death rate that will compare favorably with any other section of the country.

Cotton Production

Mississippi converts a smaller percentage of its cotton crop into finished products than any of the major cotton producing states and yet it holds second rank in cotton production, being surpassed only by Texas.

With a cotton crop averaging from 1,800,000 to 2,000,000 bales per year, it can be readily seen that the fleecy staple is the state's chief source of wealth, and it will no doubt remain so unless some sort of shift by creative science develops a satisfactory synthetic for cotton.

A crop of about 1,850,000 bales, indicated production for the current year, at current prices means placing $185,000,000 in cash in the pockets of cotton farmers during the final months of the current year. Cotton seed oil, meal, hulls, etc., will add $25,000,000 to this sum. Cotton seed crushed each season averages around 500,000 tons. Area on which this crop is produced is about 2,500,000 acres.

The Lumber Industry

There was a time, less than a half century ago, when Mississippi had in her southern counties the largest area of long leaf yellow pine forests in the world. How that vast forestry resource was ravished by saw mill operators, with no thought whatsoever of conservation, is one of the dark tragedies in the state's history. Multiplied millions in timber values were destroyed each year by senseless logging methods.

Today the scars of that tragedy are being slowly healed. The long leaf pine forests are showing forth sturdy new growth in many counties. While the importance of conservation has not been driven to a sufficient depth into the minds of lawmakers and landowners, some headway is being shown. Mississippi is still a state with splendid timber resources. The 1940 Federal census showed a commercial forest area in the state of 15,860,000 acres and a saw timber area of 8,325,000 acres. Lumber sawed during the past three years has averaged about 1,500,000,000 board feet per year. Much of it has been used for building of army camps and war industries.

Some of the cut-over pine lands are replenishing themselves. There is need, however, of more adequate protection against forest fires and a more vigorous and systematic program of reforestation.

Mississippi's future development must depend largely on her two greatest soil resources—cotton and lumber. When her people face that fact they will really begin to get somewheres.

Nearly all of the state's area of 28,000,000 acres is fairly good land, some of it truly wonderful land, but less than 9,000,000 acres are in crops or cultivated pastures. Fully 19,000,000 acres are in woodland and wasteland, chiefly woodland.

Much of the former timber land has been denuded. Barren hillsides have been left to wash away. Not until the CCC program was launched several years ago were serious attempts being made to prevent soil erosion and reclaim lands that had been badly eroded because of neglect by former generations. Of all New Deal organizations the CCC accomplished more lasting results than all others combined. The youngsters did succeed in proving the folly of allowing soil to wash down from slopes and hillsides, filling creeks, lakes and rivers and causing not only flood losses but depriving the soil of value amounting to untold millions of dollars.

Idle lands form what is unquestionably Mississippi's greatest asset. Much of this 19,000,000-acre area of undeveloped land is in reality good land and can be bought chiefly and farmed profitably when ordinary intelligence and proper diligence are used.

Slowly but surely, the lesson is being driven home into the minds of the people of Mississippi that they must do more living at home and boarding at the same place; that they must look to themselves; that they must work out their own salvation; that they should not sit idle and wait for people from other states to come in and skim the cream from the state's natural resources.

Kentucky—Past, Present and to Come

By E. A. JONAS

Until a relatively recent date, Kentucky was distinguished among her sister states by her dutiful observance of the relation which had existed between her mother, the Old Dominion, and herself. Perhaps she seemed to forget that, as a child, she had been rebellious and had striven hard and early for independence; however that may be, Kentucky, the fifteenth state admitted into the Union—her date 1792—held to the old allegiance with nostalgic fervor rather than in any filial sense of obligation. A very large proportion of early settlers came through Cumberland Gap from Virginia, North Carolina and Pennsylvania and may be said to have unconsciously established a certain priority, a word which today has a business-like sound, but does not imply aristocratic precedence. They did not, unless as an exception, come from the first families of Virginia, for example, but they became not the first families of Kentucky, but the first families in Kentucky.

What did they find as they followed the Wilderness Trail? Good hunting would be the first answer, plenty of elbow room which they held and extended by the right of the stronger arm, a splendid river navigable to its delta from way up yonder beyond Fort Pitt, streams that fed it, meadowland and lands arable, a climate neither too rigorous nor too soft—these were the early and unmistakable components of the heritage they were establishing. The red man was a restraint rather than a foe ever alert and conceivably destructive. It was not long before the pioneers might be said to have to provide only against sporadic warfare, bitter, to be sure, but not truly a determining factor against the opening up of a promised land. And already these men, these families, had very little of the merely adventurous about them. They founded cities, built churches, looked southward down the Ohio for markets. More than that, they did not blush to flirt with the treasonable idea that perhaps Spain might give them a better deal than Washington or Richmond. In the nature of the case they took to agriculture and were rewarded with bountiful crops of corn, of wheat, of tobacco, but another and a different sort than the tobacco of Virginia and North Carolina. Of course they cut down forests with no thought of conservation, just when and where timber was needed; equally of course they were not too careful of life, wild or human, no respecters of law and order but pretty much like those spoken of in Old Testament days as being each a law unto himself.

It was this quality of manly independence, of self-reliance, of self-assertion, intensified by rare skill in the use of arms that made the Kentuckian then and now, prefer a scrap above all things earthly and prompted him to volunteer for service and to form groups to fight the British at New Orleans or the Mexicans on the border and, so doing, to decorate the national story with illustrious names. And apart from this, like all roving men the world over, there was a touch of poetry, a hint of music, more than a trace of the romance that attaches to a Robin Hood quite as much as it does to a King Alfred. Thus it happens that a nostalgic yearning, familiar the world over, poignantly felt throughout all the land, attaches to the Kentuckian who was always thinking of home, as to the Virginian in a like situation; "Carry me back to old Virginny," is paralleled by the anguished cry, "Weep no more my lady" of Foster's OLD KENTUCKY HOME. Right up to the outbreak of the Civil War Kentucky was debatable land. It was not an accident that destiny made her the birth-place of Jefferson Davis as well as of Abraham Lincoln. It was not an accident that, up to the time when the negro ceased to be property, he had been in Kentucky a friend who was also a slave, and up to that time Kentucky had thought of herself hardly at all as a great commonwealth of vast resources to be exploited and to become the nucleus of great cities, but rather as a land of broad acres held by the few, cultivated by the slave and only sparsely thoughtful of the poor white trash. Kentucky did not secede. She was a border state that gave great numbers of her heroic men to both North and South and, today, remembers in honor almost exclusively, those who wore the gray, rather than those who wore the blue. She did not secede, I repeat; perhaps it would be more correct to say that, in sentiment, in sympathy and by process of political exclusion, she did secede after the war, and, in great measure, has remained in a state of impenitence ever since. For which reason, until quite recently, few Kentuckians were willing to consent to be known as Republicans and Republicans were never elected to high office except by Democratic votes, that is to say through an angry split in the other party.

If I mention this at all, it is because the industrial and commercial progress of the state have been gravely halted and impaired by this policy of looking to the South. Across the river, Ohio and Indiana prospered mightily while Kentucky did not. She went on being proud and poor. She continued to divide her splendid lands into Blue Grass, the Purchase, the Pennyrile Bear Grass, which included Louisville, and the Mountains. She neglected the mountains where great wealth of coal was being exploited by foreign capital, reluctantly admitted, and where the people, approximating in their living conditions to those of east Tennessee, were popularly known as queer people, static in an Elizabethan simplicity, hospitable to a fault, and much given to feuds of a Corsican intensity. Her crops were cash crops, such as tobacco, and her Blue Grass within the last half century has become something like a playground for the very wealthy men and women who love the horse, who love the sport of racing the horse and who own breeding establishments, rivaled but not surpassed anywhere else in the country. But these people are not residents, the estates they maintain serve to flatter the state pride in the thoroughbred and in some instances, as in the case of MAN OF WAR, become shrines. About the time when this emigration, exploitation rather, of the Blue Grass was taking place, foreign capital began to invade another great Kentucky industry and the prosperous little distilleries, whose brands were known the wide world over, sold out to great organizations of capital which, in the natural order of things, merged them into holdings and properties, which, managed by Kentuckians and employing Kentuckians to a preponderating extent, when they made a profit, as commonly they did, did not allow those profits much to profit the commonwealth unless in the matter of taxation and wages. It is a situation which has resulted in another fact, or condition of life, which must be mentioned. It has been said and well said, that the most valuable, the one irreplaceable export of Kentucky, is her young men and her young women. The reason for this is two-fold. The first is the lack of educational facilities of the highest type, the paucity of facilities for research, the downright poverty of universities, admirable within their limits, as compared with the great institutions of the East. The schools have offered, with astonishing sacrifice on the part of staffs, ill-rewarded and too little appreciated, a gallant resistance. More they could not do and since the state was allowing industrial expansion to find a home all around its borders but not in itself, opportunity and invitation to work and to rise, were sadly to seek.

Is all this of yesterday? Are we on the eve of a new era? Has Kentucky reached the point where, in matters of business, of education, of vision, she consents to the prevailing idea, not the political idea, but the economic idea, that it is time for a change? Nostalgic longings pay no dividends. To brood over a romantic past produces conditions of temper and of temperament of which Italy is the best example. The European state which has most generously exported its young men and its young women to the impoverishment of the homeland, which comes knocking at the door of our western world for help in the art of government, of politics, if I may use the word in the better sense, Italy, was the native home of the art of government and of politics. Kentuckians smile tolerantly and with cynical amusement when reminded of the famous saying, "And politics the damndest in Kentucky." It is not a boast but it as yet is not regarded, as it should be, as a reproach.

The war is changing all that, changing it from the bottom up rather than from the top down. It has waked up Louisville, quite lately described and not without point, as a "museum piece." If it is waking up the Commonwealth of Kentucky in all its breadth and all its length, but most of all in the minds of a self-satisfied people, then will the war have become a war of liberation at home as well as for the enslaved populations of Europe and of the eastern civilizations. One reads the papers day by day to find an increasing sense of obligation, an increasing sense of opportunity, and to be delighted with the prospect that opportunity and accountability, solidly buttressed, as they must be by financial support, are about to be heard from in a big way. There is every reason to believe that such plants as Curtiss-Wright, U. S. & Goodyear Synthetic Rubber, DuPont powder for explosives, Westinghouse, U. S. Carbide, are in our larger Kentucky cities to stay. America on a peace footing tomorrow, will not be as America on a peace footing the day before yesterday. Her needs will be more than physical, more than needs of military and war preparedness. She will make demands on schools and universities which must be met. She will require industrial satellites and aides of the most varied character. She will give employment and invite a population not nourished on the past, nor yet coughed up by a present emergency, but here to stay, here to bring in a new and much desired element, a little loose as to its anchors perhaps, but knowing and intending to get what it wants and must have.

There should not be in the era that lies immediately ahead an exportable surplus of young men and young women. There should rather be an influx, new blood, fresh minds, and unaccustomed abilities not at first readily to be assimilated. This new element likes its surroundings and is not dismayed by the sketchiness which is the mark of transition, at high pressure, under enforced self-denial, which is the mark of social conditions today the wide country over. Life, in Kentucky as elsewhere, is making a sport of doing without and doing it with mighty little grumbling. That will not continue, nor should it. Right ahead lies a period of urgency of quite another sort, the kind of urgency that is sometimes reflected in runaway markets and competition and ruinous prices for homes and for the necessities of life, or what are esteemed as necessities. Kentucky makes ready for that emergency betimes. The banks now join together to assist and to advise. The store of savings, as yet only partly touched, must sometime find an outlet in private enterprise which, I dare to believe, is not to disappear from among us. Schools and churches, universities and colleges, the lowest grades and the highest, will have to be provided on a plan less ancient, less scholastic perhaps, but more practical, than heretofore. Kentucky must get rid of antiquated obsessions and drawbacks, such as the preposterous provision limiting official salaries in state and city to $5,000 a year. We have great hospitals but they are not great enough and they recognize the fact. We have famous schools of medicine which through every condition of slump, have held on bravely, nobly, and vindicated the reputation which has long been so justly theirs. Our roads are not the best in the world and our country roads, our dirt roads so-called, are a lamentable handicap to the bringing of farm produce to markets. Air routes will very certainly be extended and travel by rail will, with equal certainty, be made more comfortable and assisted by the centralization which a new passenger station for Louisville will bring. The question of rates is a question for experts and the experts do not agree, but it is surely not too much to say that the South, of which Kentucky must be regarded as part, cannot much longer be discriminated against for reasons which seem to be as ancient and as out of date as the War between the States. Possibly too. water-borne traffic is going to bring back the glory, if not the romance, that was the Ohio, in which event, from Ashland to Paducah and beyond, there would necessarily arise new business which might be better described perhaps as a revival rather than as new. Above and beyond all these elements making for the greater Kentucky of tomorrow, are electrification of rural areas and a more generous approach to the conservation of Kentucky's crowning glory, her scenic setting. Of this, her parks are the best known and the most deservedly valued of all her natural assets. They have not been professionally designed and architected, dressed up, landscaped, manicured, out of all semblance to the wilderness which fascinated Daniel Boone. They are placed in situations easily accessible and they are being served by accommodations sufficient and comfortable for the travel they attract. As yet Kentucky has not been any too generously included among the sights which the sight-seer cannot afford to neglect. It follows that a great army of the public, foreign and domestic, has yet to be brought to the knowledge of the magnificence, the primeval splendor of this part of our as yet all but unexplored wealth. Such travel can bring great revenue to the state and to its people. It can bring much more than revenue. It can bring a sense of wonder that such glories should have lain so long all but unknown in a land that prides itself on the conservation of natural resources, the protection of national beauties, the preservation of wild life, and the education of its youth to a more full, more just, more pictorial concept of this land of ours.

I do not speak of oil or of minerals or of the newer discoveries in agriculture, of which the soy bean is a first rate example. There is no space to deal adequately with so many of the aspects of life typically Kentuckian. If it was ever true that the sun shines bright on the old Kentucky home, it is true today; would he be a bold man who ventured to say that perhaps it shines differently and that the difference is one of less fancy, better health, a broader toleration and a belief in the spirit of the people undimmed and unaffected by changes which cannot as yet be charted, but which are as certain as the rising of that sun.

Tennessee

Tennessee was admitted to statehood June 1, 1796. It has an area of 42,246 square miles, and its population can now be figured as more than three million.

The state is popularly divided into east, middle and west Tennessee. East Tennessee in the great smoky mountains, comprises the eastern mountain border, the beautiful east Tennessee valley, and about half of the Cumberland mountain plateau. Here are produced corn, cotton, apples, peaches and winter wheat. Middle Tennessee reaches from about the center of the plateau to the Tennessee river, and is a region of fertile terrace, including an elliptical basin of about 5000 square miles, known as the Garden of Kentucky. It yields grain, tobacco and much cotton. West Tennessee extends from the Tennessee river to the Mississippi river, and is somewhat brazen in the east, succeeded by a rolling plain descending to the latter river. It is extremely fertile and produces good crops of cotton and corn.

The forests covers about thirty thousand square miles, and yields a half billion feet of lumber—oak, yellow pine, gum, yellow poplar, hemlock and chestnut.

The chief mineral product is coal. Others are iron, ore, copper, zinc, gold, silver, clay products, phosphate rock, sandstone, marble and limestone. Agriculture is an important industry. The lead crop is corn, followed by wheat, oats, hay, potatoes, sweet potatoes, peas, peanuts, cotton. Climate and soil are such as to permit a great diversity of crops.

Chattanooga

By J. U. NICHOLS

As a place to live, work and play, beautiful Chattanooga has long been known to citizens and visitors alike as one of America's most interesting and inviting cities.

Set in the very geographic center of the great Tennessee Valley now so much in the public eye because of the enormous operations being carried on there by the TVA, and rimmed about with rugged mountain grandeur, this richly-favored city presents a unique blending of enchanting scenic wonders, fascinating historic background of Civil War battlefields, and a bustling scene of industrial greatness.

Here scenery and history are intimately linked. In '63, this peaceful locale was transformed into a roaring theatre of war. Union and Confederacy struggled in a death grip for possession of this strategic point.

Mountainsides echoed to the din of conflict and fertile soil ran red with the blood of the Blue and the Gray on five Chattanooga fields.

But what a change today! Now, this setting of scenery and history has become hub of the vast TVA electric power empire—modern giant of industry—and developments are emerging on every hand like magic conjured up from an Aladdin's Lamp. One of the colossal projects, the $40,000,000 Chickamauga Dam, is located in the northern outskirts of the city.

Metropolis of the Tennessee valley with a population of 193,215 in 1940 Census, but now estimated by the same source at 217,000, Chattanooga is truly a cosmopolitan city. It is neither southern nor northern but a mingling of the two. Following the great Civil War, large numbers of Union soldiers who fought on local battlefields came back here to join with Confederate veterans in the building of a city. Many of Chattanooga's largest industries were founded by Union veterans, and their sons and grandsons are operating them today. General John T. Wilder, whose batteries shelled Chattanooga in September '63, came back to make his home here and founded the iron and steel industry in this region.

While Chattanooga's great and constantly-growing tourist business brings many millions of dollars annually into the city's commercial channels, the main industry is manufacturing. Out of the 437 plants pours a never-ending array of products which for variety cannot be surpassed in any other manufacturing center. More than fifteen hundred articles make up the daily grist. Among these may be listed such things as steam boilers, farming implements, gas, coal and electric ranges, electric refrigerators and heaters, silk, cotton and wool textiles, mill supplies, machinery, plumbing equipment, bath tubs, soil pipe, structural steel, furniture, clothing, building supplies, glass bottles, ceramic products, electrical fittings, chemicals, coffins and caskets, beverages, medicines, cosmetics, cement, paper, boxes and cartons, electrically treated ore, brass, copper and iron castings, high grade steel, leather luggage, and so on and on.

Because of its many industrial plants and its readiness, Chattanooga was awarded contracts for the production of vast quantities of war materials of many kinds.

Commercially important is the fact that Chattanooga is the home of three large insurance companies having more than a million policyholders in thirty-five states, half a billion of life insurance in force, and annual accident and health premiums totaling more than $10,000,000.

The city's industrial importance is founded upon these contributing factors: Near-by sources of needed raw materials, excellent transportation facilities, cheap TVA hydro-electric power, high class Anglo-Saxon labor, and proximity to the nation's greatest markets.

Nine different railroad trunk lines serve Chattanooga as well as numerous truck and bus lines, two air lines, and the Tennessee River with its year-round navigation. Four national highways cross here, Nos. 11, 27, 41 and 64.

Developments growing out of the concentration of electric power production in this area by reason of the system of hydro-electric power dams of the TVA give rise to the belief that the region is already well on its way to becoming the Ruhr of America. Manufacturing, already stimulated by the vast quantity of low-cost electric power, is expected to cover the entire Tennessee Valley with great plants of many kinds, and the Tennessee River, now made over into the second most important stream in the United States, is now in process of developing into a great highway of commerce. Barge lines are coming into existence and more are to follow. Boats are now bringing to this region grain from the Middle West for our flour mills, oil, automobiles, steel and other things. Manufactured goods are flowing out. A large new modern river terminal designed by the TVA has been completed and is now in operation. Similar terminals have been opened at Knoxville, Gunter'sville and Decatur.

Twice a year the Steamer Gordon C. Greene, of Cincinnati, visits Chattanooga with a boat load of summer vacationists and twice a year, sometimes oftener, the Idlewild, of Louisville, an excursion steamer, comes in for several days to run sight-seeing and dancing trips up and down the river. The pleasure boating prospects on the river are exceedingly promising, as well as the commercial, and more of these boats like the Gordon C. Greene and the Idlewild are expected. Some local steamers are planned.

Chattanooga's greatest asset for water sports, however, is Chickamauga Lake, the great pool formed by TVA's Chickamauga Dam. Mirroring the towering mountains and rugged forests of the picturesque countryside, the lake extends upstream a distance of fifty-nine miles and ranges in width from one to three miles. On its bosom swift motorboats vie in interest with sporty sailing craft. Frequent racing regattas during the summer provide thrilling entertainment for both participants and on-lookers.

On the shores of the lake are three parks, the 1,200-acre Harrison Bay State Park for whites, the Booker T. Washington State Park for colored and the county's Marine Park.

Also on the lake is a United States Coast Guard station.

Within Chattanooga's metropolitan area and easily accessible in all seasons are many intriguing spots for visitors. These include world-famous Lookout Mountain from the point of which one gazes upon the awe-inspiring panorama of the Moccasin Bend of the Tennessee River; Chickamauga National Military Park, the nation's largest battlefield memorial, with its hundreds of monuments and its fine network of roads; Fort Oglethorpe, during peacetime one of the country's finest cavalry posts, but now serving as induction center for Tennessee Selective Service men and as site of the Third WAC Training Center; the National Cemetery with its more than 15,000 soldier graves, which was created just after the great three-day battle of Chickamauga; the Lookout Mountain Incline Railway, steepest in the world, with a grade of 72 degrees at its steepest point; Signal Mountain with its entrancing view of the Grand Canyon of the Tennessee, thirty-mile gorge formed by the stream when it breaks through the lower reaches of the Cumberland Mountains; Point Park on Lookout Mountain, beautiful Rock City Gardens on Lookout and the Lookout Mountain Caverns, which feature a 145-foot underground waterfall.

Chattanooga's history dates back to the earliest days of the country. In 1540, Hernando DeSoto and his followers on their journey of exploration passed directly over the present site of Chattanooga and discovered the Tennessee River. It was then and for three hundred years afterwards the home of the Cherokee Indians.

In early 1800, a trading post was established here on the south bank of the Tennessee River by John Ross, a Cherokee chief, and his brother Lewis. This post was known as Ross' Landing. In 1839, the settlement which sprang up around the trading post was incorporated under the new and budding state of Tennessee and its name changed to Chattanooga. Meaning of the name Chattanooga is not known for sure but it is generally believed to be a word derived from the Choctaw and translated "rock coming to a point," which accurately describes Lookout Mountain which towers over the city like a great sentinel.

Because of its strategic location as gateway to the deep South and its importance as a railroad center, even in the '60's, Chattanooga was highly prized by both Union and Confederate armies. During the fall of 1863, this town became the most active military theatre of the war. Within the space of three months four pitched battles were fought here. These were the great three-day Battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 19th-21st, one of history's fiercest and bloodiest engagements where American valor is said to have achieved its highest mark; Battle of Orchard Knob, Nov. 23d, which afterwards became Grant's headquarters; Battle of Lookout Mountain, Nov. 24th, picturesquely known as "The Battle Above the Clouds;" and the Battle of Missionary Ridge, Nov. 25th, which is regarded by many historians as the turning point of the war since this Union victory launched Sherman on his campaign through Georgia which resulted in splitting the Confederacy in half and hastened its downfall.

Chattanooga has 292 churches, 186 white and 106 colored, representing nineteen different denominations, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish. Assisting in the religious work of the city are such organizations as the Y. M. C. A., with two large plants for white and one for colored; the Y. W. C. A., with a large plant for white women and one for colored; Boy Scouts, Girl Reserves and Girl Scouts.

Augmenting the city and county public school systems are two military schools for boys, the Baylor School and the McCallie School, both of which have national reputations; and the Girls' Preparatory School. There are also two private schools of the kindergarten and grammar grade class, the Bright School and the Wert School. At the top of the educational opportunities is the University of Chattanooga. By special arrangement with the city and county government, the University provides a number of scholarships to boys and girls graduating with honors from the city and county high schools.

Other educational institutions are the Chattanooga College of Law and the Cadek Conservatory of Music.

Supplementing the educational facilities are these cultural institutions: the Little Theatre, the Civic Chorus, the Symphony Orchestra, the Opera Association, the Community Concerts Association, the Public Library, the Barnard Astronomical Society, the Music Club, the Art Association, the Writers Club and the Bible Institute.

Considerable attention is given in Chattanooga to recreation and many are the facilities provided for both young and old. For the golf players there are five fine courses, including two picturesque courses on Lookout Mountain and Signal Mountain. Then there are the Tennis Club, the Rod and Gun Club, the Fly and Bait Casters Club, the Chickamauga Yacht and Boat Club and the Sportsmen's Club. For the general public are municipal golf course, tennis courts, baseball and softball diamonds, swimming pools and supervised playgrounds. All of these are busy day and night throughout the long outdoor season.

With its more than 10,000 acres of municipal, county, state and federal parks, a temperate all-year climate, magnificent scenic setting, fine public spirit and friendly, hospitable people, Chattanooga is indeed a happy city in which to live and work.

Knoxville

Knoxville, located in the heart of the rich East Tennessee Valley, stands as an important commercial and industrial center of a prosperous section.

As the business hub of an area that is both agricultural and industrial in nature, Knoxville's retail stores, wholesale houses and industrial plants serve a rich and profitable territory. Knoxville has a fine group of retail stores that serve an area within a 75 mile radius of Knoxville, and the wholesale houses do business not only throughout East Tennessee, but with all of the surrounding states, and in many cases to more distant points.

The industries of Knoxville are diversified—the major groups being textiles and clothing, men's and boys' clothing, cassimeres, hats and caps, underwear, shirts and shirting, cotton fabrics and gloves. The products are shipped to all parts of the United States and in some instances to foreign countries.

Knoxville is the largest heavy-weight cotton-knit underwear manufacturing center in the world. Knoxville made hosiery is sold everywhere under various trade names. Clothing manufactured in Knoxville is sold over a wide area, and much of it goes to wearers under well known brands.

The chief food products are flour, meat, butter, bread, coffee and cattle feeds.

Wood-working products include lumber and millwork, living room furniture, tables, chairs, refrigerators, cabinets, boxes and caskets.

Metal working plants include such as rolled iron and steel, temperature regulating devices, coal mine equipment, quarry and mill machinery, stoves, general foundry products and structural steel.

One of the leading electrical porcelain manufacturers of the country is located in Knoxville. In addition to shipping to every state in the Union a large portion of the product is exported to foreign countries.

The largest manufacturer of plastic buttons in the United States is located in Knoxville. The buttons include a wide variety of colors and patterns. A few of the other plastic articles made here include parts for textile machinery, cigarette holders, cosmetic boxes, keys for adding machines and typewriters, a varied line of electrical appurtenances and plastic handles.

Marble is one of Knoxville's most important products. The territory adjacent to Knoxville is the second largest marble producing area in the United States, turning out the famous Tennessee marble that is used in fine structures in all parts of the world. The National Gallery of Art at Washington is built of Tennessee marble.

Knoxville is the main city of the largest soft coal production section in the United States. Normally over 45,000,000 tons within 75 miles of Knoxville are produced annually. The price of coal, high in heat value and low in sulphur content, delivered in Knoxville, is probably the lowest of any industrial city in the United States.

Memphis

By S. L. KAHN

Situated high on Chickasaw Bluffs overlooking the majestic Mississippi River, where Tennessee meets Mississippi and Arkansas, the hospitable city of Memphis lives up to its name—for the Egyptian word Memphis means "city of good abode."

Memphis, practically at the head of the lush alluvial valley that is the Delta of the Mississippi River, has an incomparable position in the fair-flowering land that is Dixie.

Great and beautiful municipally-owned parks give a verdant beauty to the city in the midst of teeming business activities. Wide and well-paved thoroughfares are everywhere in this metropolis of beautiful homes, fine churches, well-kept and high-rated schools and colleges and ever-expanding commerce and industry.

Cleanliness is ever a dominant theme of the city officials and widespread use of natural gas from the city's own light and power system has virtually banished the gloom and dirt that is a natural concomitant of soft-coal consuming municipalities. Pride in the manner in which the streets are kept is a fetich with all who have a part in the control of the city's operation.

Memphis, a city successfully operated by the commission form of government, with a population of more than 300,000 persons is the natural gateway between the East and the West and the North and the South. For many years the accepted crossways of the country's rail system it is destined for an even larger place when the airlines come into full flower for from here will radiate direct airlines to all parts of the country, as do the Nation's highways now. „

The city embraces some 51 square miles and has a healthy altitude of some 270 feet above sea level. Its hospital and medical facilities are unexcelled and its medical center, with the University of Tennessee's College of Medicine, College of Dentistry, School of Biological Science, School of Pharmacy and School of Nursing as its center, is rapidly becoming nationally-known. Complete and elaborate clinics of far-famed physicians and surgeons are here in number and the city's vast number of hospital rooms is capped by the Crippled Childrens' Hospital and the Hospital For Crippled Adults—two of the Nation's outstanding institutions of their kind.

On a parity with the city's hospitals and medical facilities are the city's hotel accommodations for visitors. Here may be found real hospitality, sufficient for almost any large gathering and graciously and moderately offered. Never has the charge of imposing high rates, regardless of the occasion, been made against the city's inn keepers.

While truly representative of the old South, Memphis is keeping pace with the trend of today and tomorrow and has gone in for industrialization in an extensive way.

Great numbers of America's largest manufacturers have selected this city as the site for their large war—and post-war industries. Scores employing thousands of men and women, white and black, have been built and are in operation. Others are projected—the land bought and plans announced in detail. Labor is friendly and will be available in quantity here after the war. Living costs are relatively low and while the war produced a moderate shortage of homes this condition is expected to be overcome, once the flow of essential building materials becomes normal—for Memphis is definitely on the upgrowth and with all the advantages the fertile section and Memphis' unparalleled location offer it is definitely destined to become the queen city of the South.

Nashville

By MAXWELL BENSON

A winding river flows by the high bluffs above Nashville. Down that winding river, the Cumberland, on a spring day in 1770 came a small band of intrepid men from over the mountains of North Carolina. Their leader, not yet thirty years old, was James Robertson.

On the banks of the Cumberland young Robertson stopped his boat, spent the night and next morning began the making of the first settlement ever erected there. He became the founder of the city called Nashville, and on the spot there stands today a replica of the fort—Fort Nashboro—made famous by the hardy band of settlers led by James Robertson.

In such fashion, no doubt, most Tennessee towns were founded. Nashville was to have the good fortune to grow steadily and surely and become the capital of a great one of the United States, and one of the South's focal points. It is today a community of culture, industry, education. A city of progressive, home-loving Southern-American people, in many ways different than nearly any other of the great cities.

In the year 1770 there was one man—one fire on the banks of the Cumberland River; in the year 1940 on the banks of the Cumberland River there were literally thousands of fires in homes that range from the humble dwelling to the stateliest mansion and nearly 250,000 people.

However, for ten years prior to 1780, the builders of this new civilization were engaged in the task of preparing for the founding. When James Robertson, of Scotch descent, born in Brunswick County, Virginia, but who had been living in Wake County, North Carolina, for ten years, left the Watauga section and came to this new "Promised Land" that lay beyond the Cumberland Mountains and about which he had heard the Indians talk, he was credited with being the first white man to reach either the "Big Salt Lick," as a spring on the banks of the Cumberland was known to the Indians, or "The Bluffs," as the actual settlement of Nashville was first known. He arrived at his destination in 1770, and remained during the summer and fall, gathering his scanty corn crop, storing it in a crib he had built and returned to the Watauga settlement for his wife and baby. In the next year he came back to "The Bluffs," bringing several adventurous men with him.

The valley in which Nashville is located was "a center of vast population" long before it met any white man's eye. This is one thing about which there can be no dispute. In no other part of the North American Continent do we find so many manifest indications of a race known as the mysterious Mound Builders, or the "stone grave race," we are told by the late Bishop E. E. Hoss, professor at Vanderbilt University and revealed in Grew's History of Tennessee. Many of these old mounds are to be found in the territory adjacent to Nashville.

After his second visit to the Middle Tennessee Basin, and after he had established himself and those who accompanied him, Robertson again returned to North Carolina, or rather to the Watauga Settlement on the Nollichucky, and soon organized another party to come to this section and settle, and it is to this latter group, under Robertson's leadership, that the real settlement of Nashville must be credited. In the early fall of 1779, Robertson headed a band of eighty white men and one negro, who started overland in wagons, on horseback and on foot, coming to "The Bluffs." The families of these men, with additional men to form protection, were to come by boat, making the long journey by that method for safety and for more comfort for the women and children. Robertson's men reached "The Bluffs" in 1779, during the "hard winter" and joined those who were then here, there being forty able-bodied men and as many as 200 people already at "The Bluffs."

On December 22, 1779, with John Donelson, a friend of Robertson, as their leader, and loaded on forty boats, with Donelson's big boat, "The Adventurer," as the leader, the party set out from Fort Patrick Henry, on the Holston River, near where Kingsport, Tennessee, is now located, with "The Bluffs," as the objective. Down the Holston to where it joins the Tennessee River, or "The River with the Big Bend," as the Indians termed it, this little party made its way, fighting the treacherous currents and shoals, near Knoxville, one of the boats was driven on the rocks and lost. From there on down the course of the Tennessee River they wended their way, fighting Indians who infested the banks and enduring hardships until they reached the point where the Tennessee empties into the Ohio and thence up the Ohio to the Cumberland River. Here their task became even harder, the current of the river was stronger and their approach was contested by Indians. The entire trip on the Cumberland was upstream and the going very hard. It was not until the evening of April 23, 1780, that the settlement on "The Bluffs," was sighted, and amid the cheers and shouts of rejoicing from both those in the boats and on shore, the little fleet came to journey's end and joined the party already here under Robertson.

No community can survive without some form of government and leadership, and Robertson and Donelson soon became the leaders of the band of pioneers who formed Nashville. On May 3, 1780, the "General Arbitrators" was organized as a form of government to be used until things became more stable, and a due form of government for the little colony could be prepared, approved and put into execution. The life of the little group was arduous from the beginning. On the journey down the Tennessee, occupants of one boat were found to be infected with smallpox, and this boat was isolated and kept in the rear of the flotilla. At night it was always anchored separate from the others and became the object of frequent attacks by Indians. This proved disastrous for the Indians as they contracted the disease and whole tribes were almost wiped out.

The settlement of Nashville was founded by pure Anglo-Saxon people of refinement and culture, determination, character, and ability to accomplish things in the right way. Today Nashville possesses that same spirit. These things have won for the city the name "Athens of the South."

Located in the heart of the Middle Tennessee Basin, built along winding banks of the Cumberland River, the city is surrounded by a fertile agricultural section, with the beautiful foothills of the Cumberland Mountains forming a protective barrier around this area, with splendidly paved highways leading in all directions, railroads and river aiding in forming a transportation system unsurpassed anywhere, and an air line service equal to any in the country. Within the corporate limits there are 170,750 people and, in the densely populated suburbs, 75,000 additional citizens who earn their living in Nashville and from Nashville's industry and commercial resources.

Within its corporate limits the city contains 22.3 square miles and suburbs added, brings this to a far greater figure. It is located 500 feet above sea level, has a mean temperature of 59.6 degrees, average mean summer temperature 79.3 degrees; the average January mean temperature 39.2 degrees. It has an average rainfall of 46.3 inches and the humidity is moderate. Nashville has 400 miles of streets; over 350 miles of water mains in the ground and additional lines under construction; 413 miles of sewers, 293 miles of gas mains. Eight bridges cross the Cumberland River. The City has 27 parks and playgrounds and containing 3,583 acres of ground; a water supply that is pure and inexhaustible with 51,000,000 gallons capacity daily and a 2,000,000 auxiliary high-pressure reservoir to facilitate this system for one of the high territory needs; adequate hotel facilities; splendid homes of all types; 1,043 apartment houses, and manufacturing concerns of all classes. Nashville has four Federal Low Cost Housing Projects.

The Hermitage. Within a few minutes' drive from the heart of Nashville, is located the "Hermitage," beautiful and historic home of President Andrew Jackson. This stately mansion, built in 1819, a relic of the days of chivalry, stands just as when "Old Hickory" and his honored guests and family lived and walked through its majestic halls, and as it was at its master's death in 1845. The bedrooms are the same, the furnishings and fixtures remain undisturbed. In the garden, planted by the hands of the beloved Rachel, wife of Jackson, is the tomb where Rachel sleeps beside her celebrated husband. Other members of the family and household are also buried on the grounds of the Hermitage.

Not by the mere adopting of a slogan has Nashville become known around the world as "The Athens of the South." Ten colleges and universities are located here. There are 19 preparatory and denominational schools; 24 commercial and vocational schools; 47 city public schools and 83 county public schools. Among the universities and colleges are Vanderbilt University, Peabody College for Teachers, Scarritt College for Christian Mission Workers, David Lipscomb College (Church of Christ); Fisk University for negroes, Meharry Medical College for negroes.

Nashville is served by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railway, the Louisville and Nashville Railroad and the Tennessee Central Railway.

Seven Federal highways run through Nashville, and there are 57 motor truck companies blanketing the trade territory and making overnight deliveries to points within a radius of 300 miles.

There are three national and three state banks here. One national bank is the 102nd largest in the United States out of approximately 15,000 commercial banks. On September 30, 1944, total deposits of these Nashville banks exceeded $307,000,000.

The volume of business done in this area is split very evenly between the retail trade, wholesale distribution and manufacturing. Surrounding the city is a rich agricultural area. The city's business is stimulated by a big volume from its many colleges and universities, and from the considerable tourist travel through here in peace times.

There are 330 churches in Nashville; 12 hospitals with 4,425 beds and a 1600-bed army hospital erected at a cost of 3½ Million Dollars.

Nashville has eight major hotels with 1684 rooms.

It has 21 white parks and playgrounds, and six for negroes. Over four million dollars are invested in these parks.

Cheap electric power is one of the keys to Nashville's business-industrial success. The City owns its own distribution system, which is administered by an Electric Power Board composed of Nashville business men, and operated by a personnel with long experience in the electrical field. Power is bought from the Tennessee Valley Authority, the leading power producing source of the United States, and is re-sold to 65,000 Nashville homes, industrial and commercial customers at rates just about the lowest in the entire United States. There are nearly 55,000 homes in Nashville using electricity. There are 372 miles of water mains; 17,165 customers of the artificial gas company and 297 miles of gas mains; and over 57,000 telephones in use.

Consolidated Vultee Aircraft, Inc., operates a large airplane manufacturing plant in Nashville. Nashville is also one of the country's big centers of rayon and cellophane manufacturing, through the du Pont interests. More than 99 per cent of labor in this area is native born.

ALCIATORE, Roy Louis, proprietor of Antoine's Restaurant, New Orleans, was born in New Orleans, La., on December 19, 1902, the son of Jules Louis and Marie Althea (Roy) Alciatore. He was educated at St. Aloysius College, New Orleans; St. Paul's College, Covington, La.; Spring Hill College, Mobile, Ala.; Chenet Institute, New Orleans; Tulane University, New Orleans. Married Miss Mary Pearl Duggan, daughter of Dr. T. A. and Lyda McIlvaine Duggan, and sister of a Spring Hill classmate, on April 9, 1932, of which union there is one daughter, Yvonne Elaine Alciatore.

His grandfather, Antoine Alciatore, a chef already famous in Marseilles, France, had opened the Pension Alciatore in New Orleans more than a hundred years ago; Jules Alciatore, his father, after studying and working under his father, Antoine, had perfected his art in France, and the same course was followed by Roy, who, after serving an apprenticeship (even including dishwashing) under his father, was taken by the latter, in 1923, to France to perfect his education. Upon his return, he became Manager in 1930, and, upon his father's death in 1934, sole owner and proprietor. He has brought to even higher excellence various dishes for which the Restaurant has become famous; he has built the "1840 Room," a replica of a fashionable dining room of that period; he has published a wine list, the first 300 copies of which have become collectors' items; he has plans for writing his recollections of some of the famous dinners he has served to celebrities. He is former President (1937), and Vice-president (1936), New Orleans Restaurant Men's Association; member of Board, New Orleans Convention and Visitors' Bureau; Director, National Restaurant Association; member of many committees and Members' Council, Director of Association of Commerce; former member, Board of Curators of Louisiana State Museum; member, Board of Commissioners, Public Belt Railroad, Southern Yacht Club, Young Men's Business Club, New Orleans Athletic Association, and several Carnival organizations; also a member of Wine and Food Society, Les Amis d'Escoffier Society, Gourmet Society, and Chevalier du Confrerie du Tastevin. ALEXANDER, Colonel Lester Fisher, marine contractor and President of the Lester F. Alexander Co., New Orleans, La., is best known, perhaps, for his enthusiasm for the proposed canal to connect New Orleans with the Gulf, lower river, for which the name of the Alexander Canal has been proposed by his fellow-members of the Board of Commissioners, Port of New Orleans, otherwise known as the Dock Board. It is claimed that such a canal will not only reduce the hazards, but will shorten the distance, and, consequently, the expense. At a time when his name is in nearly every newspaper and every man is proud to be called his friend, some details in the life story of Lester F. Alexander are valuable knowledge.

He was born on a farm in Dallas County, Texas, on February 3, 1879, the son of Charles Pinckney and Nancy (Fisher) Alexander. He had little formal schooling, this man who was later to be sent by the Government to construct and improve the Southwest Pass, at the mouth of the Mississippi River; who now owns his own shipyards on the Industrial Canal, New Orleans, producing during the first six months of 1941, more than a million dollars' worth of tugboats, barges, and derricks, which were delivered throughout the West Indies, the Canal Zone, and on the Gulf Coast. He originally planned to build equipment for his own use only, but an outside demand for his products developed and has grown rapidly although no salesmen are employed. His constructions are all-steel, welded—not riveted. His was the first shipyard to build tugs upside down. The tugs are welded under cover in two pieces, hull and deckhouse. When fabricated, they are rolled to the water's edge, the hull is put in the water, the Diesel engine placed in it, and the deck-house installed. This method results in efficient production and dependable performance, matters which Colonel Alexander understands well from experience.

In addition to his contracting and ship-building interests, Colonel Alexander is a Director and member of the Executive Committee of the Whitney National Bank; former President of the Dock Board; member of Advisory Committee of Birmingham Ordnance District; Director, New Orleans Association of Commerce; Director, New Orleans Rotary Club; Colonel in Officers Reserve Corps U. S. Army; member, Army and Navy Clubs (New Orleans and Washington, D. C.); member, American Society of Military Engineers, Louisiana Engineering Society, New Orleans Athletic Club; life member, Southern Yacht Club; member of several Carnival organizations; a Mason and a Shriner. Married Gladys Billers on June 5, 1929, of which union there are two sons, Lester F. Alexander, Jr. and William B. Alexander. Residence: 28 Audubon Place; office, 830 Audubon Bldg., shipyards, Industrial Canal.

CAZENAVE, Comte Leon Bertrand Arnaud, host of "Arnaud's," in New Orleans, was born in France on June 27, 1878, and, near the close of the "Gay '90's" came to New York as the representative of a champagne firm. It did not take long for this astute young Frenchman to discover the charm, the old-world atmosphere, of New Orleans, and here he had ambitions of establishing a restaurant which should serve superlative food in a polished, Continental atmosphere. He had been carefully educated in his native France, attending the Preparatory School of Salices-de-Bearn and completing his courses at the Lycee Napoleon in Paris. To this excellent foundation he has added his suave personality, his sense of fitness, his genius for forming firm friendships, so that Count Arnaud stands to-day the perfect representative of an order that is fast disappearing—an order schooled in the art of gracious living.

It was in 1920 that he opened his restaurant—his friends and patrons promptly christened it "Arnaud's"—and it met with immediate success. His "shrimp Arnaud" is famed throughout the world, wherever travellers meet who have eaten in New Orleans' famous French restaurants. "Arnaud's" has since spread to an adjoining building, so that its patrons drift in and out of small rooms, to come finally to rest at a table where the most succulent food and the finest liquors are deftly served to them by expert waiters. Fortunate indeed is the party which Count Arnaud elects to join, for he is a raconteur of the first order, a bon vivant of the old school. His is a commanding figure, handsome, distinguished, always attired in the height of fashion, with a white gardenia in his lapel. He has great pride in the city and the country which have been so hospitable to him, and to which he has contributed so much of charm.

C., 1911-1919; Lawyer, Nashville, Tenn., 1919 to present date. Was counsel for Tennessee Academy of Science in Scopes case 1926. This "bizarre" case practically killed the Act prohibiting the teaching of Evolution in Tennessee, because a majority of the Court was unable to agree upon what the law meant, one Judge McKinney held the Act void for uncertainty; Judge Chambliss held that the Act did not prohibit the teaching of Evolution as usually taught in schools and colleges, Judge Swiggart did not participate, resulting that the Chief Justice stated to scientists assembled in Tennessee that they were safe in expressing their views. The case was briefed and argued in the Supreme Court by Clarence Darrow, Tom Malone, William Waller, Henry E. Colton, Arthur Garfield Hayes and others in behalf of Scopes, and the Supreme Court of Tennessee—Chief Justice Green and Justice Cook in my presence personally directed the State Attorney General to dismiss the case against Scopes and not to have it prosecuted further.

DeFRIECE, Frank William, Lawyer, was born in Washington County, Virginia, September 26, 1882, son of William R. DeFriece and Martha Jane Elizabeth Clark. He was born and reared on a farm. His father was a share cropper, and for lack of funds it was always his practice to get any possible supplemental work while in college and the university. Through his own and his parents persistence he made his way, paying part of the college costs after graduation. Thus he received his education at Emory & Henry College, Emory, Virginia, 1897-1903, receiving a B. A. Degree; graduate work at Harvard University; Columbia University, M. A. Degree, 1913; LL.B., 1914. Extensive foreign travel. General practice, and attorney for The S. E. Massengill Company to 1932, and General Counsel for The S. E. Massengill Company since that date. Was Associate Local Counsel for the Southern Railway Company, 1915 to 1918. Served as Y.M.C.A. Secretary on transport in World War I, after being turned down on application for active service.

Served as Commonwealth Attorney for Bristol, Virginia, 1917-1920; member of Virginia Legislature two terms, 1922 and 1924; member of Bristol Chamber of Commerce, Bristol Bar Association, Virginia Bar Association, Tennessee Bar Association, American Bar Association; admitted to practice in all Federal Courts; East Tennessee Local Director, Tennessee Taxpayers Association; Educational Committee, United States Chamber of Commerce. Had charge of high schools in Southwest Virginia for eight years in their formative period, 1903-1911; charge of Department of Political Economy, King College, Bristol, Tennessee, 17 years.

Has never joined any civic clubs, but has worked with all of them. Member of Columbia University Alumni Association. Was a member of the Democratic Party as long as we had one. Chairman of a committee on Victory Bond Drive, 1944; chairman of Price Panel and a member of the Rationing Board of Bristol, Tennessee. Member of the Presbyterian Church and Chairman of Board of Deacons; was teacher of a Bible Class for years. Was General Counsel for The S. E. Massengill Company when it established the invalidity of a patent for making Phenylmercuric Nitrate, a reliable antiseptic, and thus opened up the use of this drug to the medical profession and the public at a reasonable cost, saving the American people millions of dollars in the lower cost of a drug valuable in the saving of life and the preservation of health.

He was also General Counsel for this company in charge of its defense during the period of its Elixir Sulfanilamide tragedy of 1937-1938, when it was alleged to have caused the death of one hundred people. The provable claims were all settled. A demand for a more restricted and professionally supervised use of the drug grew out of this catastrophe, bringing about a new National Drug Law and a more careful study of all new drugs. During the time he has been with The S. E. Massengill Company it has more than trebled its sales, now amounting to over $5,000,000.00 per annum, the largest general manufacturing pharmaceutical house in the South. There are five corporations connected with this business, all of which Mr. DeFriece is General Counsel. They sell in every state in the United States, and in foreign countries, all under his legal direction. He was chairman of the first local Taxpayers Association in Tennessee even before the State organization, the present Tennessee Taxpayers Association, of which he is an active director. He married Miss Pauline Massengill on April 20, 1918, at Bristol, Tennessee, and has three children, namely, Frank W. DeFriece II, Marthina DeFriece, and Josephine DeFriece. Residence: "Belvedere", Bristol, Tennessee. Business: Fifth Street, Bristol, Tennessee.

FLIPPIN, John R., born in Memphis in 1878, the son of Judge and Mrs. John R. Flippin, Mr. Flippin inherited the sterling traits of his parents. He was to rise from an unpaid apprenticeship in the cotton trade to a position of outstanding distinction as a business man, sportsman and civic-minded citizen. His father had been judge of the Criminal Court of Shelby County (in which Memphis is located), mayor of Memphis and president of the Taxing District that re-established the city's credit and its standing as one of the South's foremost communities after the yellow fever epidemic of 1878 had killed thousands of citizens and left the city's finances a tangled mass of wreckage.

Mr. Flippin was educated at the famed Wall and Mooney School at Franklin, Tenn., and desiring to learn the cotton business went to work in the trade without pay. For a while he labored as an armature winder for the Memphis Street Railway Co., at $3 a week. In 1906 he entered the cotton business for himself with Hardy Jones under the firm name of Flippin and Jones. The partnership was continued until 1924 when the partnership was dissolved and both partners retired. Mr. Flippin's interests were varied and extensive and retirement did not mean inactivity.

He organized the West Memphis Compress Co., and after that company was taken over by Federal Warehouse and Compress Co., became a vice-president and director. After his "retirement", Mr. Flippin served for several years as director of the Memphis Power & Light Co. In 1932 he was made publisher of The Commercial Appeal and Evening Appeal and continued in that capacity until the newspapers were sold by their owners.

Mr. Flippin's knowledge of railroads and railroading is extensive and up to the time of his resignation in October, 1941 he was a director of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. He is a director of the Union Railway of Memphis and the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad. After the formation of the Office of Defense Transportation Mr. Flippin was placed in charge of the Memphis office. His duty was to expedite the movement of freight.

Mr. Flippin's interest in civic and charitable causes is great although he labors quietly and without ostentation. For a number of years he has been president of the Memphis Sunshine Home For Aged Men, which is exactly what its name implies. He was able to obtain funds to construct the fine home that now houses a number of men who are far along in years.

For six years Mr. Flippin served as president of the Hospital for Cripple Adults. It was during his administration and under his direction that funds were raised for the new and modern building the hospital now occupies. He is a member of the governing board of the Methodist Hospital and a trustee of the Porter Home and Leath Orphan Asylum.

Always an eager sportsman, Mr. Flippin was one of the organizers and builders of the Chickawas Golf Club and was its president for five years. His interest in conservation of the South's game resources and in clean sportsmanship is second only to that of his interest in the city's public welfare. He is president of the Tri-States Game and Fish Association—an organization that has fought game hogs and for the creation and maintenance of game conservation laws. He is a member of the exclusive Menesha Club at Menesha, Ark., and the Memphis Country Club.

Mr. Flippin is a Knight Templar and a Shriner. His home is at 2284 Court, Memphis.

FORBES, Ernest Erastus, President of E. E. Forbes & Sons Piano Co., Inc., was born on a farm near Oxford, Calhoun County, Ala., on March 28, 1867, the son of William Patrick and Sarah Elizabeth (McCulley) Forbes. His paternal grandfather, John M. Forbes, was a staunch Presbyterian who so desired to advance the cause of his church in his home that he took his slaves with him to erect the church building in Oxford. Mr. Forbes' great-grandfather had come from Scotland, while his maternal grandfather, Barney McCulley, who helped to remove the Indians from this territory to the Indian Reservation in Oklahoma, had come from Ireland. He attended school in Calhoun County and at Oxford (Ala.) College. He came to Birmingham in 1887 and secured a position with the Gilbert Carter Co., selling pianos and organs for $15 monthly and expenses. He first went into business for himself at Anniston, Ala., later establishing branches at Rome, Ga., Huntsville, Ala., and Bessemer, Ala., but eventually moving the Bessemer business to Birmingham. Having an opportunity to buy a bankrupt stock of pianos in Montgomery, he moved there and remained seven years.

At that time he married Mary V. Mallory, daughter of James Blackwood Mallory and Jeannetta McAuley Mallory, of Choccolocco, Ala., on August 12, 1897. Mrs. Forbes' paternal grandfather, whose land was purchased from the Indians, had built the first cotton spinning mill in the South, which was burned by the Yankees after peace had been declared.

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Forbes: (1) Ernest E. Forbes, Jr. (married Mary Keister, of Montgomery; three children, Ernest E. Forbes III, William Keister Forbes, and Lucas Matthew Forbes). (2) James Mallory Forbes, (married Juliette Buckalew, of Roanoke, Ala., two children, James Mallory Forbes, Jr., and Edwin Buckalew Forbes); (3) William Kenneth Forbes (married Wille Lee Long, of Marion, Ala., three children, Kenneth, Mary Frances and Will), of Birmingham; (4) Jeannetta (Mrs. Aubrey Miree, Jr.), of Birmingham; three children, Aubrey Stinson, III, Mallory Forbes, and Richardson Forbes; (5) Herman French Forbes (married Rosamond Harilee; two children, Herman French Forbes, Jr., and Nelson Harilee Forbes), of Birmingham. Mrs. Mary V. Mallory Forbes was killed in an automobile accident in Clanton, Ala., in 1928. Mr. Forbes married (second) Mrs. Annie Wilcox Thompson, September, 1933, the mother of three children, Louise Thompson, Martha Lynn Thompson and Ben McRae Thompson.

The business of which Mr. Forbes is President was organized as a corporation in 1933, his sons and daughter becoming shareholders and directors: E. E. Forbes, Jr., and J. Mallory Forbes, Vice-Presidents; William Kenneth Forbes, Treasurer; H. Cliff Schultz, Secretary. The establishment now occupies five floors and a warehouse, employs about a hundred persons, and does a wholesale and retail business. There are branch stores located in Anniston, Decatur, Gadsden, and Montgomery, Ala., all handling fine pianos, all types of musical instruments, refrigerators, electric appliances, pictures, mirrors and novelties. In November, 1942 his daughter, Mrs. Aubrey Miree, presented her father with a portrait of himself, painted by A. L. Bairnsfather. It has been the custom of the company to reward faithful employees with a yearly bonus check upon such occasions as the company has made a net profit. Mr. Forbes stating that every firm should divide its profits with the people making them.

Mr. Forbes is a member of the First Presbyterian Church; member of Board, Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Talladega, Ala., Director, National Association of Music Merchants; member, Knights of Pythias, Knights of the Round Table, Citizens Historical Association (Birmingham Chapter). Hobby: His work, Presbyterian Mission which he conducts each Sunday at Tarrant City, Ala.

GARNETT, Charles Lowrey. Attorney. Born on Westover Plantation, Leflore County, Mississippi. His father was Warren Henry Garnett, a descendant of the Garnett Families of Essex County, Virginia; Garnett is a Norman-English name. His mother was Lula Lowrey, daughter of Robert Lowrey and his wife Sarah McMillan; her grandfather Daniel McMillan represented Franklin County in the Constitutional Convention of 1833; the Lowrey and McMillan families were of Scotch descent. When the subject of this sketch was old enough to go to school his parents acquired a home in Durant, Holmes County, Miss., for school advantages. He later took a Bachelor of Science degree at Mississippi State College, and a LL.B. degree with special distinction and first honors at University of Mississippi. He also studied accounting at Bryant & Stratton Commercial College, Louisville, Ky. and did summer work in the law school of the University of Michigan. After a few years in school work he went to Paris, Texas, and was admitted to the bar there in 1901, but decided later to return to Mississippi because of his wide acquaintance in Mississippi. In April 1909 he moved to Columbus and formed a partnership with the late Frank C. Owen under the firm name of Owen & Garnett. A year later they became associated with the late Jennings I. Sturdivant under the name of Sturdivant, Owen & Garnett. This firm lasted fourteen years and until Mr. Sturdivant withdrew to become circuit judge. Owen & Garnett continued to practice until the death of Mr. Owen January 1, 1942. Mr. Garnett has since practiced alone. He has been trial attorney for the C. & G. Ry. Co. in counties of Lowndes, Clay, Oktibbeha, and Webster for 30 years; trial attorney for Southern Ry. Co. in Lowndes County for 30 years; trial attorney for M. & O. RR. Co. and its successor G. M. & O. RR. Co. 18 years; local attorney for Frisco Ry. in Lowndes County.

Served as Lowndes County Chairman for the late Senator Pat Harrison in every campaign.

In 1920 and again in 1922 he was offered the position of Assistant Attorney General of Mississippi, but declined the offer both times. He claims to be the only man ever born on Mississippi soil who twice declined an office with a fair salary when that office was offered to him on a silver plate and all he had to do was to take it.

He was delegate from Lowndes County to Democratic State Convention in 1932, and was a delegate from the State Convention to the Democratic National Convention in 1932; he went to both conventions mostly for the experience; he wasn't after an office.

Member: Phi Delta Theta Fraternity; Elk since about 1902; charter member and past president of Kiwanis Club; withdrew from American Bar Association after a membership of 23 years because he became dissatisfied with its policies; member of State and Lowndes County Bar Associations.

He is in much demand as a public speaker, and gives as much time to public addresses as he can afford to give; his comments on public questions are frequently sought by newspapers that know him. He is regarded as a powerful speaker for any cause he espouses.

He has traveled extensively in this country and in Canada.

He is active in the practice of law in both State and Federal courts. His office is 508-10 N. 2nd Ave.

Home: Gilmer Hotel.

His philosophy of life may be summed up in the words:

"I am a true laborer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man ought; envy no man's happiness; glad of other men's good; content!"

GODCHAUX, Frank Area, Business Executive and Public Spirited Citizen; born November 29, 1879 in Abbeville, Louisiana, son of Gustave and Kate (Area) Godchaux. He was educated at Louisiana State University, Tulane University, and Vanderbilt University, married Agnes Putnam, March 20, 1901, has one son, Frank A. Godchaux, Jr.

He began his career in the rice business as rough rice grader and buyer, was later made manager of Planters Rice Milling Company of Abbeville, a year later was also made manager of the Mutual Rice Mill at Gueydan, Louisiana. In 1911, he was made president of a newly formed organization, the Louisiana State Rice Milling Company, which consolidated 33 rice mills. Later, the California State Rice Milling Company, Texas State Rice Milling Company and Arkansas State Rice Milling Company were added.

In 1920, Mr. Godchaux directed the national rice industry advertising campaign, involving all the rice industry, to increase the rice consumption in the United States. The Tip Top Canal Company, which was acquired by his company in 1911, has been under his direction since that time.

He is now Chairman of the Board of Directors and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Louisiana State Rice Milling Company, Inc., with his son, Frank A. Godchaux, Jr. as president. He declines to serve as director in companies not controlled by him and his friends.

Mr. Godchaux and his son own and operate the Live Oak Plantation, Agnes Plantation and Fairview Plantation, all near Abbeville, where they maintain a pure bred herd of Aberdeen-Angus cattle and are working toward the development of a new breed of cattle resulting from many cross breeds, especially adapted to Southwest Louisiana conditions.

Mr. Godchaux is now serving his second 8-year term on the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University and is past president of the Alumni Association and during his administration led a successful campaign to raise money for building Dudley Stadium. He is serving his second 4-year term on the Louisiana State Board of Education and has continued to be elected President of that Board each year. Largely through his efforts, the people of Louisiana have been awakened to the need for educational improvement through raising standards, increasing school attendance, and improving the programs and the quality of instruction in the state elementary and secondary schools and colleges.

As regional director for both the national and the state organizations of the Committee for Economic Development, he has done excellent work in organizing post-war planning, with special emphasis on education and land utilization.

He is very civic minded, took the lead in having a tax voted for maintaining a free public library in Vermilion Parish, has served as District Executive in boy scout work, is a liberal supporter of charitable institutions and community building activities.

His capacity for leadership was apparent during his college career. He was quarterback and three letter man in athletics at Vanderbilt University, and won two letters at L. S. U. in his first year. He was a member of Kappa Alpha fraternity and head of the chapter of Vanderbilt University. Episcopalian. In November of 1938, Mr. Godchaux was voted by the Abbeville Rotary Club as the outstanding community worker for Abbeville and Vermilion Parish.

His home, The Oaks, with spacious grounds, located on Vermilion Bayou and beautifully landscaped featuring camellias and azaleas, is a model of beauty.

GODCHAUX, Frank A., Jr., President of the Louisiana State Rice Milling Company, Inc., the largest rice milling and distributing organization in America, with headquarters at Abbeville, Louisiana, was born in Abbeville December 27, 1901. The only child of Frank A. Godchaux and Agnes Jackson Putnam. He was married to Mary Lawrence Ragland of Nashville, Tennessee, December 21, 1925. They have three sons, Frank Area III, Charles Ragland and Lawrence Putnam.

Mr. Godchaux was educated at Woodbury Forest, Orange, Virginia, and Vanderbilt University, Class of 1924 in Civil Engineering, where he was a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity and a three-letter man in athletics as quarterback in football and in baseball and basketball, but he is probably better known because of his golf record, where he ranked among the top group of young amateur golfers in America during the days of Bobby Jones' fame.

He started his business career by accepting a position in the Production Department of the Louisiana State Rice Milling Co., Inc., of which his father had been president since the company's organization. He was soon assisting his father in the general management of the business and was made a member of the Board of Directors in 1927, becoming Vice-President in May of 1929 and President in May of 1936.

Although he was at one time a director in the Bank of Commerce & Trust Co. of Crowley, Louisiana, Mr. Godchaux's extensive personal interests in cattle raising, dairying and poultry, in addition to his official duties with the rice company and its subsidiaries, have prevented his participation in other firms. He and his father operate three plantations under the name of Frank A. Godchaux & Son, producing pure bred Aberdeen-Angus and various cross breeds of cattle. He is ex-president of the Louisiana State Aberdeen-Angus Association and has served as secretary of the Louisiana State Cattle-men's Association and as a member of the Board of Directors of the National Aberdeen-Angus Breeders' Association.

Mr. Godchaux participates actively in the civic development of this section. In addition to serving as chairman of many home front activities in connection with the war effort, he is a past-president of the Abbeville Chamber of Commerce and takes part in church and educational activities. He donated the grounds for the Gus Godchaux Park and Swimming Pool to the City of Abbeville in 1933, and maintains beautifully landscaped grounds at his home, Coulee Crest, in Abbeville.

GODWIN, George William, newspaper owner and publisher, was born at Graball, La., on November 30, 1903, the son of Thomas Frank and Mary (Didlake) Godwin. He graduated from Crystal Springs (Miss.) High School, 1920, and attended University of Mississippi, 1922-1924. Married Mamie Eugenia Birdsong, of Terry, Miss., on July 29, 1926, of which union there is one son, George W. Godwin, Jr.

While in high school and during college vacations, he did reporting and advertising work on the Crystal Springs (Miss.) Meteor; Field Representative for Dees & Eagan, Crystal Springs, Miss., covering Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee, for brokerage of carload lots of fruits and vegetables, 1924-1927; owned and edited The Terry (Miss.) mittee, Mississippi War Fund (1943-1944); member, Executive Club of Jackson; member, Rotary Club, Jackson; member, Jackson Country Club; President (1939), Boys Club of Jackson. Home: 1416 Lyncrest St.; business address, Lampton Bldg., Jackson, Miss.

GOOCH, Cecil Milton, one of Memphis' foremost philanthropists, business men and civic leaders, was born at Waynesburg, Kentucky, February 28, 1889, the son of Hunley and Mary Bell Gooch. He received his finishing schooling at Middlesboro Normal College, Middlesboro, Kentucky and began work as a telegraph operator. Mr. Gooch made his own way up the ladder of success. Entering the lumber business, he organized the C. M. Gooch Lumber Co., at Memphis in 1919. His business expanded rapidly and he acquired or built additional large bandmills at Jackson, Vicksburg, Harrison and Natchez in Mississippi. Intensely interested in the future of the Mid-South, he acquired large timber holdings in Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee as well as plantations and stock farms in Mississippi. Interested in every civic enterprise for the welfare of the states and cities in the Memphis territory, Mr. Gooch has taken an active part in all moves for their development, economically, socially and morally. Better education for the youth of the South has long been his hobby, and he and his wife have helped many to get better schooling. With this purpose as their objective in 1943, Mr. and Mrs. Gooch formed and endowed the C. M. Gooch Foundation. This Foundation sends students to colleges all over the Nation to become doctors, lawyers, ministers and nurses and to become proficient in other professions, including music and art. In the first 12-months of its existence, the Foundation financially aided some hundred boys and girls. Assisting young people to become good and useful citizens has been another of Mr. Gooch's pet projects. He has financially aided the Y. W. C. A., generously in its efforts to expand its building and facilities for service.

The C. M. Gooch Lumber Co., in Memphis is one of the City's best known industries.

Mr. Gooch and Miss Boyce Alexander were married in Memphis on September 11, 1919. Their home is at 123 East Parkway, North. The C. M. Gooch Lumber Company Office is at 1235 University. The C. M. Gooch Foundation has offices in the Shrine Building.

His was a pioneer family in the settling of Nebraska after the Civil War, while on his mother's side he is descended from the Irish who fought in the Rebellion of 1848. He was educated in private schools; Creighton University, Omaha, Nebr., from which he has received the honorary degree of doctor of laws (LL.B.); National University of Science, Illinois (N. A. degree). Married Miss Angela Colsson, at Mobile, Ala., on October 16, 1908, of which union there are four sons and two daughters; Andrew J. Higgins, Jr., Frank O. Higgins, Edmond Higgins, Roland Higgins, Mrs. Andre Danna, and Dawn Higgins. His sons are all associated with him in business.

During his vacations, while still attending school, he had branded logs in a Wyoming lumber camp; after finishing college, he worked in a bank for a short while, but found that type of work too confining; ran a sawmill and engaged in scientific farming, Mobile, Ala.; deciding on a career in lumber business, he taught himself timber cruising and became inspector for Lumber Exporters Association; Manager for a German lumber export concern, New Orleans, La., 1910; resigned, to organize his own logging and lumber business (Higgins Lumber and Export Co.), 1915. At this time his exports of Southern pine required one of the largest fleets of sailing vessels in U. S. Registry. His logging operations took him into swamps and bayous, where he needed boats which would navigate in shallow water, and so he, resourcefully, set about designing and building such a boat. From that almost accidental beginning has developed the now famous "Higgins boat," which he builds in vast quantities at his two huge shipyards on the Industrial Canal, New Orleans, and with which he supplies the U. S. Government for worldwide use. The development of his boats has been a task of slow evolution, possible for Mr. Higgins because he is a perfectionist who is satisfied with nothing short of perfect adaptability of the boat to the uses for which it is designed and the waters in which it must navigate. The Higgins Industries, Inc., is holder of many millions in Government contracts.

Mr. Higgins has recently been awarded the contract to build 1,200 transport planes for the government, and has built an immense plant about twelve miles east of New Orleans. So many thousand people are employed that a small city has been created named Higgins.

He is member of Automotive Engineers' Society, Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers, National Aeronautics Society, United States Power Squadrons, Army Ordnance Association, New Orleans Association of Commerce, and Southern Yacht Club, and an officer in none. Mr. Higgins is President of both Higgins Aircraft, Inc., and Higgins Engine Co., Inc. Home: 3105 Prytania Street; business address, 521 City Park Avenue, New Orleans, La.

HOWE, J. Ed., dean of Shreveport, La., news writers, has been identified with the newspaper and printing industry in that city since 1894, when he went there to work for the Shreveport Times.

Since 1900 Mr. Howe has devoted himself almost entirely to newspaper reporting and editorial work, and has served newspapers in Meridian, Miss., Vicksburg, Miss., Birmingham and Montgomery, Ala., Corsicana and Texarkana, Texas, Houston, Texas, and Fort Smith, Ark., and both Shreveport newspapers, the Times and the Journal. In 1902 he established a daily newspaper and commercial newspaper business in Ruston, La., which he operated for four years.

In 1916 he was elected secretary of the Shreveport Chamber of Commerce, serving 14 months. He left that post and went to Dallas, Texas to engage in the manufacture of phonographs. One year later he became associated with the Bankers Savings and Credit System Co., of Cleveland, Ohio, a position which took him into 24 states and Canada and Mexico.

In 1924 he returned to the newspaper field and became a copy reader on the Houston, Texas Post, later becoming city editor of the Texarkana Journal, then Fort Smith, from where he returned to Shreveport where he has resided since, except for a short period that he was night editor of the Monroe Morning Post.

In 1935 Mr. Howe wrote and published a 477 page history of Shreveport, and followed it up in 1937 with a 377 page history of Texarkana, Texas-Arkansas. He is presently editor of the Louisiana Farm Bureau News, and interviewer for the United States Employment Service under direction of War Manpower Commission.

Mr. Howe is a native of Lincoln Parish, educated in the public schools of Natchitoches Parish and one term at Keatchie Male and Female College, 1887-1888. Mrs. Howe also is a native of Lincoln Parish, born near Ruston. She was educated in the public schools of Lincoln Parish and Louisiana Polytechnic Institute.

Mr. and Mrs. Howe are the parents of four children, three of whom are living, Miss Edmina Howe, James E. Howe and Miss Minette Howe. Their daughter, Marjorie Howe, for several years a columnist on the Shreveport Journal and publicity director for the Washington-Youree Hotel, died August 27, 1935.

HOWELL, Clark, newspaper publisher, was born in Atlanta, Ga., March 23, 1894, son of Clark Howell and Harriet Glascock (Barrett) Howell. Attended public schools of Atlanta, the Woodberry Forest Preparatory School in Orange, Virginia; graduated from University of Georgia, A. B., 1915; Harvard Law School; Oxford University. On November 3, 1923, married Margaret Carr, of Durham, N. C., and from this union there are two children, Clark, Jr., and Wm. Barrett.

Clark Howell is the third generation of a noted newspaper family. He is carrying on where his father and grandfather left off, writing a series of chapters in the history of that grand old paper, the Atlanta Constitution. He faced a great responsibility in living up to the marks set by Captain Howell, his grandfather and Clark Howell, Sr., his father, when he took over the operation of the newspaper in 1936, following the death of Clark Howell, Sr. In brilliant fashion he has met the responsibility and today The Constitution is on the road to even greater accomplishments.

He entered the first officers' training camp at Fort McPherson. Served as Captain and Major of Infantry, 82nd Division, A. R. F., during World War I. Served in France through the St. Mihiel and Argonne campaigns, was wounded near St. Juvain, meanwhile having been promoted to the rank of Major. A Lieutenant Colonel, World War II, until he became Adjutant General, State of Georgia, January 11, 1943, to September 28, 1944.

General Howell was general manager of the Atlanta Constitution, 1930-36; editor and publisher Atlanta Constitution Publishing Co., since 1936; President, Theatres Service Co. He is a member of Board of Regents, University of Georgia; member, Fulton Company Board of Education; Director of the Associated Press (resigned when he entered the military service, Sept. 15, 1942). He is a member of American Newspaper Publishers' Association, Past President Southern Newspaper Publishers' Assn., Chi Phi, Sigma Delta Chi, Capital City Club, Piedmont Driving Club and Rotary Club. Episcopalian. Democrat. Home: 680 W. Wesley Road. Office: The Constitution Pub. Co., 148 Alabama St., S. W., Atlanta, Ga.

HOWELL, Eugene Alexander, President of the First National Bank of Canton, Miss., and Lawyer, was born on Strong River, Simpson County, Miss., on July 7, 1870, the son of Fleet Pertan and Julia Ann (Weathersby) Howell. His father was from Rankin County, his mother from Simpson County, and he was reared on the south edge of Rankin County, near Braxton, Miss. He was educated "in a limited way," attending the public schools of Braxton, Miss.; Grafton's School, of Union Church, Jefferson County; Peabody College, Nashville, Tenn.; graduated from the University of Mississippi Law School, 1897, with distinction, and was Valedictorian for the University for that year. While in school, he was a member of the Debating Society at Braxton and Union Church, member of the Hermean Literary Society at Peabody College, and of the Delta Tau Fraternity and the Moot Court at the University of Mississippi.

He worked on the farm from the time he was ten until he was twenty years of age; taught country schools, 1890-1894; held public office nine years; practiced law 22 years; active vice-president and President, First National Bank, Canton, Miss., for the last 24 years. After his graduation in law, he formed a partnership with A. E. Weathersby, Monticello, Miss., and, six months later, with Judge J. B. Chrisman, Canton, Miss.; was first appointed prosecuting attorney for Madison County by Governor E. F. Noel, and later elected to another four-year term; served four years as Attorney for Board of Supervisors, Madison County; first elected and then appointed by sixteen successive administrations as member of Water and Light Commission, Canton, Miss., serving continuously in that capacity for 33 years; member, Board of Trustees, Alcorn College, appointed by Governor E. F. Noel; held one term of court at Lexington under appointment of Governor E. F. Noel, as Special Judge.

He was a member of the County Committee and Speakers' Club to sell Liberty Bonds in 1918. Is member, K. of P. Lodge; member, Masonic Lodge; member, Canton Rotary Club; was at one time President, Canton Chamber of Commerce, President of Canton Rotary Club, President of Canton Water and Light Commission, and President of First National Bank of Canton, all at the same time. He never belonged to any military organization. He joined the Baptist Church at Gum Springs, Simpson County, when 18 years of age, and held membership in the Canton Baptist Church for the rest of his life.

He is the oldest of a large family, and was forced to work for every dollar spent on his education. Out of small means, he travelled in 38 of the States of the Union, and in Canada, and out of 82 counties in Mississippi, he travelled in all but ten. He was too busy in establishing himself as a lawyer, and in supporting and educating his children, to find much time for sports; in fact, never had any hobby unless it was love for and proficiency in figures. In mathematics, he was always two to three years ahead of other subjects. The habits acquired from necessity in early life, remained with him: for example, he kept all his tax receipts, all his paid bills, all checks on his bank accounts, and, from month to month, a record of all he earned and all he spent, which he condensed at the end of each year, so that, with these data, he was able to break down the amounts, and know the exact sums spent for various purposes.

He is a graphic and copious writer, and published many extended sketches of persons and places, tributes to friends and acquaintances, accounts of contemporary events, many public letters on law enforcement, taxation, and finance. The weekly letters he wrote his children and his annual Holiday greetings to relatives and friends, never failed to radiate optimism and encouragement.

The political campaign in which he was most proud to have had a share, perhaps, was the ten-year fight in Madison County to put licensed saloons out of business, a fight which was successful just a year before State-wide Prohibition was passed by the State Legislature. As Executive Officer of the First National Bank of Canton, Miss., for 24 years, it is to his credit that the First National Bank of Canton, out of five banks in the County, was the only one to withstand deflation in 1933, and to keep its doors open.

HOWELL, George Blaine, President, Tampa Shipbuilding Company, Inc., Tampa, Florida. Born Ithaca, New York, May 2, 1893, the son of Charles Clark and Anna Wyckoff (Blaine) Howell. Attended Louisville Male High School and Kentucky Wesleyan College. On April 14, 1928, married Bessie Hardwick Dover, at Louisville, Ky., of which union there is one daughter, Bessie Dover Humphrey.

Mr. Humphrey began as automobile salesman, Browder-Hoskins Co., Louisville Chevrolet dealers, in 1926, promoted to Assistant Sales Manager, 1927; connected with Bacon-Pence Co., Willys-Knight Distributors as sales manager, 1927-1928; organized Humphrey Motor Co., in 1928, of which he was president. This business was liquidated during early days of depression and made connection with the Monarch Auto Co., as appraiser. During 1930, he conducted first experiments on Quick-Frozen Foods, in 1931 other experiments followed and in 1932 resigned from Monarch Auto Co. to enter the Frozen Food business. As these products were to be used largely by the Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional consumers, an experimental Restaurant was conducted for a short time in 1932 and 1933 in order to familiarize himself with the various problems confronting this type of trade in the proper handling of Frozen Foods. In 1933 organized Standard Foods, leased and equipt a plant building and started the freezing of meats and meat by-products. In 1936 erected a modern freezing plant at 729-731 South 8th St., in Louisville, the site of the present business, and secured Federal Meat Inspection. The business expanded rapidly until it was necessary to start construction of an enlarged plant building in 1944. Standard Foods Service, a distributing organization for Standard Foods Incorporated was organized in 1937, with Mr. Humphrey serving as President.

Was Secretary, Louisville Kiwanis Club, 1942; President, Louisville Kiwanis Club, 1943; Chairman USO Committee of Management, 1943-1944; Member YMCA Board of Directors, 1942-43-44; Member, Board of Governors Ballard School, 1941-42-43-44; Co-Chairman Louisville Area Development Association Welfare Committee, 1944; President Methodist Athletic Association, 1930-31-32-33; Organized Kiwanis Endowment Fund, 1943. In March, 1944 Mayor Wilson Wyatt appointed Mr. Humphrey chairman of the Youth Recreation Committee and given the task of opening numerous teen-age recreation centers in the Louisville area. JARREAU, Augustus Hunter, business manager and secretary-treasurer of the Daily Town Talk, is one of the leading business men of Alexandria, La., and is widely known among members of the newspaper profession. He was born in Pineville, La., October 17, 1875. He was a son of Augustus Jarreau and Lucy Sloan, both deceased. He was reared in his native town and was educated in the public schools of Alexandria and Pineville.

As a young lad, on March 24, 1890, he went to work as a "printer's devil," in the office of the Town Talk, which position he held for ten years. He retired from the newspaper business in 1900, and accepted a position as traveling salesman which avocation he pursued for more than twenty-five years, during which time he lived in Baltimore, Chicago and New York. He resided in Baltimore four years, and in Chicago three years, going to New York in 1917 to accept a position with a large wholesale clothing manufacturer. He remained in New York until 1928, when he retired from the clothing business and returned to Alexandria and again became associated with the Town Talk.

He is a member of the Episcopal Church, Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association and of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. He is affiliated with the Masonic Fraternity and is a member of the Coastal and Kiwanis Clubs.

He is a great circus enthusiast and holds membership in the Circus Fans' Association, being state chairman. He is acquainted with every circus man of prominence throughout the country and numbers many of them as close personal friends.

He is a member of the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis Club, and takes an active part in every movement which has been launched for the advancement of Alexandria and Central Louisiana.

He has two brothers: R. C. Jarreau, Editor, Town Talk, Alexandria, and M. G. Jarreau, State Agent, Great American Insurance Co., Dallas, Texas.

On January 31, 1900, Mr. Jarreau married Miss Blanche Adams, of Natchitoches. They have no children.

In politics he is an unswerving Democrat.

JARREAU, Rollo C., editor of the Alexandria, La., Daily Town Talk, has the distinction of being the oldest newspaper man in Louisiana in point of service, and his work is unique in that he has only been connected with one newspaper during his whole career of sixty-two (62) years.

When the Town Talk was established by his family on March 17, 1883, he began work with the first issue. He has remained with it continuously ever since, serving in practically every position on the paper—including carrier boy, "printer's devil," typesetter during the old hand composition days, job printer, reporter, city editor, editor, and publisher. He has played a conspicuous part in building the Town Talk from a small village daily to one of the most modern afternoon publications in the South.

Though still busy with the active editorship and publication of the Town Talk, Mr. Jarreau has found time to devote to civic, religious and business affairs.

He is a devout churchman, a lay-reader in the Episcopal Church for fifty-five years and Senior Warden of St. James Church for many years. He was president of the Alexandria Rotary Club, 1937-1938, and has been a director of the Chamber of Commerce since its organization. He is a Thirty-second Degree Mason, and until recently was active in the Elks. He has also retired from a directorship in the Rapides Bank & Trust Company, to which he was appointed on recommendation of Harvey C. Couch. He has been a director of the Alexandria Public Library since its foundation.

Perhaps his greatest service to the community was his appointment of a citizens' committee and his personal supervision of a publicity campaign which was at last successful in reopening the public schools of Rapides Parish after they were closed during a financial crisis in 1933-34.

In addition to his Alexandria home, Mr. Jarreau owns a country place on which he grows fine paper-shell pecans. He is well known as a leader in the advancement of Southern agriculture, being one of the first to advocate tung oil as a lucrative farm product and raising a few trees experimentally on his own land.

JARRELL, Marion Fahy, D.D.S., F.A.C.D., was born at Columbia, Louisiana, February 3, 1897, son of Columbus Marion Jarrell, M. D., and Mattie Fletcher. KELLER, James Albert, President of Florence State Teachers College at Florence, Alabama, has long been recognized as one of the foremost educators of the south. His appointment in 1938 as head of one of the south's leading Colleges is significant of the esteem in which he is held by learned men and the Alumni of that institution. Vastly interested in the social and economic improvement of the south, and in higher education for the youth of Alabama, Dr. Keller's views are both profound and broad. A life long scholar himself and one who has devoted over twenty-five years in the field of education, he is highly qualified for the position he holds. Because of his progressiveness and thorough understanding of the necessary needs for a successful institution, many improvements have taken place since his inauguration.

Recognized in "Who's Who" as a leader in education Dr. Keller has contributed greatly to the cultural growth of his native state. He believes firmly in mass education as a means of raising the economic and cultural level of the south.

Dr. Keller was born in Cullman, Alabama, on December 4, 1887, the son of Nancy Cobbs and Thomas Jasper Keller. His early education was received in the public schools. After finishing preparatory school, he completed two years of study at the same institution he was later to become president of. From Florence, Dr. Keller studied at several other colleges, receiving degrees from Birmingham-Southern; Alabama Polytechnic Institute; Peabody College and Columbia University. Upon his graduation from Florence he was made principal of the Cullman County High School where he served three years. He was later appointed superintendent of that county, which position he held for three years, resigning to accept the position of county superintendent of Covington County where he remained fourteen years. From there he went to Montgomery as state superintendent of education. His present position followed shortly after that.

Dr. Keller is a member of the National Education Association. He also serves as a consultant of the Educational Policies Commission and as a member of the Legislative Committee. He is administrator of the Lauderdale County, War Price and Rationing Board. Dr. Keller is president of the Florence Chamber of Commerce. He is past president of the Alabama Education Association, and belongs to the following fraternities: Phi Delta Kappa, Omicron Delta Kappa, Kappa Delta Pi and Kappa Phi Kappa. He is an overseas World War veteran, a Shriner, a Rotarian and a staunch Baptist.

On July 5, 1921, Dr. Keller married Miss Mariglen Cornelius at Birmingham. They have two daughters, Laura Jean and Margaret Ann.

KING, Tom C., President of T. C. King Co., Anniston, Ala., was born at Anniston, Ala., on November 30, 1891, the son of Joseph Henry Lumpkin and Evelyn (Thornberry) King. Married Sally Cox at Gadsden, Ala., on November 3, 1914, of which union there are three sons: Captain Tom C. King, Jr., a University of Virginia graduate in medicine, U. S. Army Medical Corps; Captain Joseph H. King, a graduate of Georgia School of Technology, U. S. Army, U. S. Engineers; Second Lieutenant Gerald L. King, until recently a law student at University of Alabama, U. S. Army-Coast Artillery-Anti Aircraft.

Mr. King is doing a tremendous work for the Government in the manufacture and erection of prefabricated houses at Army camps, munitions plants, shipyards—anywhere, in fact, that the U. S. Armed Forces and Federal Public Housing Authority indicates a need. Control of the materials required is a vast problem in itself, and the finished produce, packed for export, has in many instances to be forwarded to coastal ports, so timed as to arrive just before sailing dates. He was not, originally, a lumber man, but began with Union Foundry Co. (now part of Alabama Pipe Co.); then he traveled for Kilby Car and Foundry Co. (now Kilby Steel), and, later, for Magor Car Co. (New York). He organized National Forge Co., Inc., Anniston; moved the plant to Louisville, Kentucky; Sales Manager for Pittsburgh Knife and Forge Co., after two years joining with other officials of this company to establish Railway Products Co., of which he was President. He sold his interests in Pittsburgh, returning to Anniston in 1929; organized King Metal Products Co., Inc. While he was thus engaged, the CCC camps began to call for prefabricated housing units, and Mr. King entered the field; his company was then known as King & Boozer, but in 1941, he and his wife bought the other interests and changed the name to T. C. King Co. Two of his brothers, James F. King and E. D. King, are associated with him in business. He is also President, Quality Homes, Inc.

LOUTHAN, A. V., Attorney, Nashville, Tennessee; born June 23, 1882, near Kenton, Hardin County, Ohio; son of G. W. and Margaret Ann Louthan; his father and mother, with several children, moved to Tennessee in a covered wagon in 1888 and settled in Bethpage, in Sumner County, approximately forty miles north of Nashville; Mr. Louthan married Rosa Mae Louthan, who before her marriage was Rosa Mae Morris of Sumner County, Tennessee; has two children, a son and a daughter, both of whom are married. His son, Cordell Hull Louthan, was recently given an honorable disability discharge from the United States Army after serving for almost three years. Mr. Louthan's wife and daughter are both active in Red Cross, First Aid and other civilian defense and war aid activities; educated in public schools and in Cumberland University at Lebanon, Tennessee where he finished his law course in January, 1911.

In 1910, he was a candidate from Sumner County for the House of Representatives in the Tennessee Legislature and was defeated. Upon completion of his law course in 1911, he became a member of the bar at Gallatin, Sumner County, Tennessee, residing at Westmoreland in Sumner County, about twenty miles from Gallatin. Upon the recommendation of Cordell Hull, then a member of Congress, Mr. Louthan was appointed and served as Post Master of his home town at Westmoreland, Sumner County, during the first administration of President Woodrow Wilson; in 1916 he was elected to the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Tennessee to represent Sumner, Macon and Trousdale Counties. He resigned as Post Master January 1, 1917 to take his seat as a member of the Legislature.

Soon after the entrance of the United States into World War One, he was called to Washington and became one of the attorneys for the War Trade Board. Mr. Louthan and three other gentlemen organized the Bureau of Enemy Trade, which administered the Trading with the Enemy Act. This organization grew until it ultimately embraced many hundreds of employees. Mr. Louthan occupied an important position near the top of this organization. He was personally complimented by President Woodrow Wilson for the skillful and able manner in which he handled a delicate, complicated problem which threatened the relations between the United States and one of the smaller Neutrals.

Mr. Louthan returned to Tennessee in the early part of 1918 and was connected with the office of Internal Revenue Collector of Nashville, Tennessee, where he made a special study of taxation. In November, 1918, he was elected, without opposition, to the State Senate to represent Sumner, Macon and Trousdale Counties. He served as a State Senator in 1919 during the administration of Governor Albert H. Roberts. Mr. Louthan rendered distinguished public service both as a member of the House of Representatives and as a member of the Senate. After the adjournment of the 1919 Legislature, he became Tennessee's first State Tax Commissioner and served in that capacity for four years. His aggressive and far reaching work as Tax Commissioner, with the reforms inaugurated under his administration, attracted favorable attention and comment in a number of other States and his services were solicited by two other States to help inaugurate similar reforms in those States.

In 1923 he resumed the practice of law in Nashville. He soon became the financial and tax consultant of several large business firms. He is at present attorney, tax consultant, policy and financial adviser for certain large corporations which he has continuously represented for more than twenty years.

In 1939 he organized the United States Expansion Joint Company for the purpose of manufacturing and selling metal highway joints used in the construction of concrete highways. His company has furnished highway joints for many miles of important military highways in Panama constructed by Public Roads Administration at Washington acting for the War Department. U. S. Expansion Joint Company is now engaged in supplying highway joints for military highways in Panama. Mr. Louthan has managed the affairs of this company with skill and ability.

Mr. Louthan is a Democrat, both in State and National politics, but he is an independent thinker and does not place party above principles. He has participated actively in all statewide campaigns in Tennessee for the last thirty-five years or more. In many of these campaigns he has been prominent and has always taken an active part in public affairs and politics. In addition to his qualifications as lawyer and tax consultant, and policy and financial adviser, he is a business executive of distinct capacity and a forceful and eloquent public speaker.

He has many official and private acquaintances and friends in various southern states. He has had business contacts with public officials in most of these states and with some of the most prominent business men. Mr. Louthan is a close personal friend of Secretary of State Cordell Hull and has been since Secretary Hull made his first race for Congress, at which time, Mr. Louthan took a prominent part in Judge Hull's campaign and spoke jointly with Judge Hull at various places throughout his District. He was prominently connected with the management of Judge Hull's successful campaign for U. S. Senator from Tennessee in 1930. He has numbered among his close intimate friends many of the most prominent public officials and prominent citizens of Tennessee for the last thirty years.

Mr. Louthan strongly believes in the righteousness of the cause of the Allies in World War Two, and has, from the beginning, actively supported the war efforts of the Government and earnestly defended our war policies. Soon after the Pearl Harbor attack, he voluntarily offered his services to the Government in any capacity in which he was capable of serving.

MAESTRI, Robert Sidney, mayor of New Orleans, born in New Orleans, December 11, 1889, son of Francis and Angele Maestri, native Orleanians of Italian and French descent. Educated in New Orleans public schools, Saint Ann's School and McDonogh Number 9, and later attended Soule College of Commerce. Before he completed his schooling he became active in his father's furniture business, at the age of seventeen. He gravitated into the real estate business and became financially independent long before he entered public office. Married Hilda Bertonniere, who for many years had been his secretary and office manager, August 18, 1936, the day following his second anniversary as Mayor.

Mr. Maestri took a prominent part in public affairs during the terms of Mayor Martin Behrman, but always as an individual and private citizen. He was finally induced to accept the office of Commissioner of the Department of Conservation, December 2, 1929, by Huey P Long, then Governor of Louisiana. He retained his office as Commissioner of the Department of Conservation until he was called upon to accept another important public position, that of Mayor of New Orleans, which he has held by re-election, since his inauguration, August 17, 1936. In both offices he has filled, Mr. Maestri brought and proved his unusual business acumen. He accepted the mayoralty at a time when the city's credit was exhausted and the current bank loans amounted to more than six million dollars, plus an accumulation of old bills that could not be liquidated, amounting to more than one and a quarter million dollars. During the first twelve months he was mayor of the city, all the outstanding bills were paid, current loans to banks reduced over five million dollars, the City began operating on a cash basis without new loans from the banks, new equipment purchased for cash, and the most extensive street and general improvement programs in the history of New Orleans far advanced with every cent of the City's costs paid in cash. In the second year of his administration accomplishments progressed with almost unbelievable speed; within a few months every current obligation, including the bank loans, was paid off; a public improvement program progressed on expansive scale, and the City continued to operate, as it does today, on strictly cash basis.

Mayor Maestri explains his success in office by giving credit to the spirit of co-operation and mutual helpfulness of the people of New Orleans in the administration of City affairs which is the common ground on which all groups and all the people in the various walks of life co-operate and make greater progress possible.

MATAS, Dr. Rudolph, New Orleans, La. Born in Bonnet Carre, La., September 12, 1860, only son of Dr. Narcissus Hereu and Theresa (Jorda) Matas, both natives of the province of Gerona, Spain, and descendants of old Catalan families.

When only two years old the son was taken by his parents to Paris, France for two years, thence to Spain, during which time the father pursued post-graduate medical studies in his specialty of ophthalmology, and practiced his specialty. In 1867 he returned with his parents to New Orleans and contracted yellow fever during the epidemic of that year. The following year the family moved to Brownsville, Texas, and later to Matamoros, Mexico.

He obtained his preliminary education in the various localities of his residence in Europe and America, beginning with kindergarten in Paris. Subsequent to 1870 he took a three-year course in the literary department of Soule's College in New Orleans, then went to Matamoros, Mexico, where he graduated with honors from the Literary Institute of St. John, in 1876.

In 1877, Rudolph Matas matriculated in the medical department of the University of Louisiana (now Tulane) and was graduated an M.D. in 1880. He won the competitive examination for the post of resident student in the Charity Hospital of New Orleans at the end of the freshman session, and served as interne from 1878 to 1880.

While an undergraduate interne he was given a furlough to serve as medical clerk laboratory assistant and interpreter with the United States Yellow Fever Commission in Havana (constituted by Dr. Chaille, Sternberg, Guiteras, and Col. Hardee), which in 1879, made the first sanitary survey of Cuba for the American Government.

From 1883-1885 he was editor of the New Orleans Medical and Surgical Journal. In 1885, Dr. Matas was elected demonstrator of anatomy at Tulane, succeeding Dr. A. B. Miles, who resigned to become professor of surgery, and in 1894, was promoted to the chair of surgery, made vacant by the death of Dr. Miles. On retiring from the chair in 1927, Dr. Matas had been an active teacher in Tulane for over 43 years—a longer term than any of his predecessors. Since 1928 he is emeritus professor.

During these years he has contributed copiously to the advancement and literature of his profession. Appearing on the scene during the transition between the old septic and new anti-septic surgery, he became a pioneer in almost every department of surgery, in all of which he has left the imprint of his thought and of his initiative. He was a conspicuous pioneer in local and regional anesthesia, in intrathoracic surgery and in the intravenous use of saline solution for the treatment of hemorrhage shock and other exhausted and collapsed states. Two of his later innovations "the continued intravenous drip (phlebotoclysis)" and the method of "continuous drainage and lavage of the gastrointestinal contents" are now in current practice and have proved two of the most valuable of the life saving measures for the relief of intestinal obstruction, peritonitis, and the post operative abdominal complications.

His outstanding contribution lies in the surgery of the blood vessels and more particularly for the cure of that formidable disorder of the blood vessels known as aneurism. In 1888 he devised an operation, which he has since perfected, based upon an entirely new and conservative principle known as the "Matas operation." In this connection it is safe to assert that Dr. Matas' experience and achievements in the surgery of the blood vessels, now amounting to over 606 operations, are greater than those of any other living surgeon. His literary activity is indicated by a personal bibliography of over 500 titles.

A mere statement of the official positions he has occupied, of the addresses he has given, of the societies and academies, lay and medical, here and abroad of which he is a member would fill a volume. Notable among his offices was the latest, the presidency of the International Society of Surgery, 1935-1938, over which he presided at the Triennial Congress in Brussels, Belgium, in September, 1938. He is an honorary LL.D. from Tulane, the University of Alabama, and Washington University, and Honorary D. Sc. from Princeton and the University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Matas was awarded the Times-Picayune loving cup for 1940 "In recognition of his years of unselfish service to his fellow man."

He is an honorary member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, of the Academie de Chirurgie (France), of the Academies of Rome, Madrid, Barcelona, Copenhagen, Peru, the Association of Polish Surgeons, and many others in the United States and abroad. McILHENNY, Edward Avery, Manufacturer, President of McIlhenny Co., Avery Island, La., was born March 29, 1872, son of Edmund McIlhenny and Mary Eliza Avery. He attended Lehigh University, and left during his freshman year to take the position of naturalist to the Peary Relief Expedition to Arctic Greenland in the summer of 1892. On June 6, 1900, he married Mary Matthews at New Orleans, and from this union there are three daughters, Rosemary, Pauline and Leila, and nine grandchildren.

Ever since boyhood, Mr. McIlhenny has been a constant observer and lover of wild life. In 1893, he established on Avery Island "Bird City", in an attempt to preserve the rapidly vanishing egrets whose feathers were so valuable and popular at that time. Plume hunters had almost killed the last bird. Mr. McIlhenny started with seven egrets and by careful protection has built "Bird City" to more than 100,000 lovely creatures. In 1897, Mr. McIlhenny outfitted and led a scientific expedition to explore Arctic Alaska. In his winter camp at Point Barrow, Alaska he cared for and fed 105 men from four whaling vessels that were sunk from ice floes. Mr. McIlhenny had a supply of guns and ammunition and killed enough Caribou to supply food for all. He did not lose one man under his care. After completion of his exploration of the coast of Alaska above the Arctic Circle, Mr. McIlhenny took his expedition to Arctic Siberia and brought back valuable collections and data for museums of United States and Europe.

After "Bird City" proved a great success, Mr. McIlhenny joined with Mr. Charles W. Ward of Michigan in purchasing and donating to the State of Louisiana in 1909 14,000 acres for feeding and resting land in Vermilion Parish as a wild life refuge. In 1911, Mr. McIlhenny consolidated the various interests owning the land on Marsh Island containing 68,000 acres in Iberia Parish. It was brought to the notice of Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage of New York, who purchased it and declared it a wild life refuge. In 1912 Mr. McIlhenny consolidated interests of 88,000 acres in Vermilion and Cameron Parishes. This was brought to the notice of the Rockefeller Foundation of New York. After a careful investigation they purchased it and declared it a wild life sanctuary. The Sage Wildlife Refuge and Rockefeller Wildlife Refuge were donated to the State of Louisiana in 1922 through Mr. McIlhenny's efforts.

Mr. McIlhenny has been instrumental in establishing wild life refuge in many parts of United States and Canada. He is author of many books and scientific papers on many subjects. During the past 40 years, he has developed on three hundred acres on the hills and valleys of Avery Island surrounding his home, one of the greatest botanical collections of America, now known and open to the public as JUNGLE GARDENS.

Mr. McIlhenny is President of Petit Anse Co., E. McIlhenny's Son Corp., and Jan-Jean Lafitte Corp. He is member of Phi Delta Theta, National Ass'n of Audubon Societies, American Game Association, American Museum of Natural History, American Ornithologists Union, Game Conservation Society, Biological Society of Washington, American Society of Mammalogists, etc.

In the conduct of this highly important law enforcement office Mr. Sanchez has displayed an utter lack of favoritism and tried every case presented by the grand juries strictly on its merits. His work has won the highest approbation of various other agencies and the judges before whom he has appeared. Prior to assuming his present position as district attorney in 1936 Mr. Sanchez had built a large civil and criminal practice in Baton Rouge. He began practicing in 1920 and in 1924 was elected a member of the Legislature, serving until 1926, and the following year was elected City Judge of Baton Rouge, continuing in that office until he was chosen District Attorney in 1936. He was recently re-elected for a second 6-year term.

Dewey J. Sanchez was born in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, on the eighteenth of May, 1898, a son of Joseph J. Sanchez, a former well-known cattleman. His early education was in the schools of Baton Rouge and after finishing high school Mr. Sanchez entered Louisiana State University where he completed his academic work and received the bachelor of arts in 1918. He then entered the law school of the University and completed his legal training and was awarded the degree of Bachelor of Law with the class of 1920. His admission to the bar followed immediately and Mr. Sanchez served three years as deputy court clerk in Baton Rouge before beginning his law practice.

On the thirty-first of August, 1918, Mr. Sanchez was married in Amite to Miss Annie Sternberger, a daughter of Ernest Sternberger, now deceased, and a former attache of the United States Income Tax Department. Mr. and Mrs. Sanchez have three children, Hazel Ann, Marianne and Ernestine Sanchez. The family home is at 553 Boyd Street.

Mr. Sanchez is a communicant of the Catholic Church, a member of the fourth degree of the Knights of Columbus, the Fraternal Order of Eagles and Elks. He is a past Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus Lodge and has been active in local fraternal affairs for many years. The principal interest of Mr. Sanchez is centered in his home and continuing his outstanding record as District Attorney. Bowling is his favorite recreation.

VANDIVER, Joseph Sloan, was the third of six children in the family of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. C. Vandiver. Sloan's father lived near Baldwyn on a farm and voted for more than 50 years at Baldwyn in Prentiss County. All the children were taught to work on the farm and to look after the farm chores and to help with household affairs. Sloan started to school at Old Asbury Methodist Church, a distance of nearly four miles, almost west, from his father's home and about four miles northwest of Baldwyn. He also taught his first school in the Old Asbury Methodist Church. About the only progress made in Asbury School from the time Sloan started as a little innocent five year old until the time when he began teaching as a timid youth of eighteen years was that the four months' school term was continuous whereas formerly it was two months in summer and two months in winter. The contract price for teaching this first school was $27.50, $25.00 and $22.50 a month. By hard work he made the $22.50 a month for the four months' term.

After his first year at Asbury, his parents decided that it would be best for the children to go to Baldwyn School—a distance of nearly four miles that Sloan and his older sister and brother "transported" themselves every day. After some eleven terms in Baldwyn school finally studying Rhetoric and Ray's Higher Arithmetic he then attended Iuka Normal Institute on an $80.00 scholarship for ten months, and later did summer work there. This was one of the greatest educational institutions in the history of Mississippi.

He taught in Prentiss and Alcorn Counties for six years during which time he farmed and went to summer normals. He taught five years at Nettleton where he was married to Miss Blanche Feemster. He also taught at Ackerman and New Albany. Then in 1916 he went to Pearl River County as Director of the Model School System, sponsored by the General Education Board. In 1918 he moved to Moorhead as Superintendent of Sunflower Agricultural High School and later became President of the Sunflower Junior College. While there J. S. Vandiver, Jr. and Margaret were born. Mr. Vandiver moved from Moorhead to Jackson to become State Superintendent of Education in January, 1936, which position he still holds.

He served as the forty-first president of the Mississippi Education Association, 1923-24. The subject of his address as President of the Mississippi Education Association was "The Teacher As a Community Builder—Mississippi, Unable Not to Have Such Teachers in Her Schools." His ambition is still to have the teacher a community builder in every school room in Mississippi, and to have this type of teacher paid a living salary from local, State and Federal Funds Without Control.

Superintendent Vandiver taught in and conducted many normals and institutes. He studied during the summer sessions at the University of Mississippi, Mississippi A. & M. (now Mississippi State College), University of Chicago, and Mississippi College, receiving his B. A. degree in 1928 at Mississippi College. He also did two summers' graduate work at the University of Alabama.

Superintendent Vandiver lists the following as outstanding accomplishments since he became State Superintendent of Public Education:

1. An 8-months school term for all the white children of the state.
2. Increase in the value of the physical facilities in school plants. Approximate value stands today at $72,000,000.00.
3. Definite improvement, development and expansion of school curriculum.
4. The inauguration of a joint School-Health program under the direction of the Department of Education and the State Board of Health.
5. Emphasis upon and development of a physical education program. Lunch Room program, 4-H Club work and Future Farmers of America organizations.
6. Definite stress on teaching Americanism and Democracy in the schools.
7. The school program has been geared to meet the demands of wartime conditions. The schools have helped out in rationing, in salvage campaigns, in war bonds and stamp sales and in every call that has been made where it was possible to make a contribution.

8. Improvement in transportation facilities, providing better and safer means for transporting the 150,000 children to school.

9. Adoption of a fine program of free-textbooks through the twelve grades of white and colored schools at a per capita cost per year not to exceed $1.00.

10. Adoption of the Kyle-Cook bill and the School Budget Law by the State Legislature providing for the business-like administration of all schools. No deficits are permitted.

11. Emphasis on Vocational educational programs provided in Smith-Hughes Schools, Junior Colleges and City School Systems.

12. Expansion in Vocational Rehabilitation and Crippled Children's Services.

13. Increase of appropriations by the State Legislature from $3,600,000.00 in 1936 to $9,787,500.00 in 1944.

14. Excellent leadership in the State Department of Education in helping to supervise and guide and build a sound educational program for the state.

15. Splendid success in Developing a Better Understanding and a Higher Appreciation of their Schools Among all our People.

WALL, Hugh V., attorney-at-law, was born and raised on a farm in Amite County, Miss. He was educated in the public schools of the County; graduated from Gillsburg Collegiate Institute, a chartered school which offered four-year courses. Having won the B. S. degree, he taught for a short while in the schools of Amite County before entering Southwestern Baptist University, Jackson, Tenn., for one year; this was likewise followed by a period of teaching in the County schools. He then entered the University of Mississippi and graduated, after two years, with the degree of LL. B.

He was admitted to practice law in the U. S. District Court, Oxford, Miss.; then to practice law at Bar of Pike County, Miss.; later to practice before Supreme Court of Mississippi and before Circuit Court of Appeals, New Orleans, La.; later still, to practice before Supreme Court of United States. He began, in partnership with Clem V. Ratcliff (Ratcliff and Wall), at Summit, Pike County, Miss.

December 16, 1908 he was married to Miss Ethel Pitts, daughter of the late Dr. Albert Brown Pitts of Hazlehurst, Copiah County, Miss., of this union there is one child, a daughter, Valerie Wall, who is at present in the American Red Cross.

He was elected District Attorney of Sixth Judicial District of Mississippi (Lincoln, Pike, Amite, Walthall, Adams, Franklin, and Jefferson counties), in primary election in 1907. In 1910 the State of Mississippi was redistricted and a part of the old District was embodied in the Fourteenth Judicial District of Mississippi. He resigned as District Attorney of Sixth Judicial District and was appointed by Governor E. F. Noel as District Attorney for new Fourteenth Judicial District (Copiah, Lincoln, Pike, and Walthall counties). He was again elected District Attorney, 1911, and re-elected in 1915 for a four-year term, which expired in January, 1920; in 1919 he was not a candidate, having served twelve years as District (or State Prosecuting) Attorney.

In 1908 he removed from Summit, Pike County, Miss., to Brookhaven, Lincoln County, Miss. He served as member of Democratic County Executive Committee for eight years. He was delegate from Mississippi to Democratic National Convention, St. Louis, 1904 (Alton B. Parker, of New York, nominee for Democratic Party), and to Democratic National Convention, Denver, 1908 (W. J. Bryan, nominee). In 1924 he was again delegate to the Democratic National Convention, New York City, which is known as longest convention ever held, due to deadlock between supporters of W. G. McAdoo and A. E. Smith, John W. Davis, New York, was finally nominated. In 1936 he was delegate to Democratic National Convention, this time to nominate Franklin D. Roosevelt for third term. He was also Democratic Elector, Seventh Congressional District of Mississippi, and at a meeting of the Electoral College he was elected Chairman; the College met in Jackson, Miss., a short while after the last election.

He is at present a commissioned officer of U. S. Government, having been appointed by the President as Appeal Agent for Selective Service System in Lincoln County, Miss.; former member, Board of Trustees, Brookhaven High School, for four years; a Master Mason and a Past Master; also a Royal Arch Mason, Knight Templar Mason, and Shriner; member, First Baptist Church, Brookhaven, Miss.; member, American Bar Association; charter member, Mississippi Bar Association.

About twenty-five years ago he was one of organizers of Lincoln County Lumber Co., a $200,000 corporation; has been member of Board of Directors and General Counsel since its organization, and is at present Vice-president and General Counsel; was one of organizers of State Bank and Trust Co.; is at present General Counsel and Director; District Counsel for Mississippi Power and Light Co.; District Counsel for Teche Greyhound Bus Co.; local Counsel for Tri-State Bus Co.; attorney for several local corporations.

When Mississippi was redistricted for Congressional Districts under the census of 1930, there followed a contest as to the Legislative Act redistricting the State, and he led the fight as attorney for the contestants in the courts, including the State Courts and the United States Courts, finally arguing the case before the United States Supreme Court, Washington, D. C. The case was lost by a divided court. He was also a candidate for Congress from the State-at-large, and stumped the State. He represented the State in a suit against the American Telephone Co., in 1920, for reduction of rates, a case which was contested in the State and United States Courts. He was associated with the Attorney General of the State and the case was finally compromised with a profit of about half a million dollars to the State.

He was one of the Presidential Electors in the regular general election November 7, 1944. He was nominated by overwhelming majority at an extra-ordinary session of the Mississippi Legislature, which was convened by the Governor of the State on November 2, 1944, to take the place of the nominees of the State Convention who refused to vote for the nominees of the Democratic Party for President and Vice President in the Electoral College.

WENTWORTH, Theodore Thomas, Jr., widely known as an historian, was born in Mobile, Ala., on July 26, 1898, the son of Theodore Thomas and Elizabeth (Goodloe) Wentworth. He is descended in the paternal line from Elder William Wentworth, who came to America in 1628 and became one of the first settlers of Dover, New Hampshire. Elder Wentworth was of the family of the Earl of Strafford, records of whose lineage have been traced back to the Norman Conquest, and in this country the Wentworths were prominent in the early history of New Hampshire, serving as Colonial Governors and citizens active in public affairs. Theodore Thomas Wentworth, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Pensacola, Fla., to which city he had removed in early life, the Y. M. C. A. Night School, and by correspondence courses and home study; also, he completed two classes in Public Speaking conducted by the Pensacola Y. M. C. A., a number of courses in Sunday School and church work through classes conducted by the Methodist Church, and a course at the Emerson Institute of Efficiency. Married Rosabel Howington, daughter of James Marion and Nanny Howington, of which union there are three children: Thomas Warren Wentworth (born July 18, 1921); Aubrey Dean Wentworth (born July 13, 1923), and Jane Wentworth (born May 25, 1927).

Even as a little boy of six, he began the active business of life, selling papers on the streets of his native city until he was twelve. After that, he was employed as telegraph messenger boy; office boy in office of R. D. Dun; from 14 to 16, he ran a small grocery store for his father; then he went into the bicycle business, added sporting goods to his stock, incorporated his business (1922), erected a brick store building, and did such a volume of trade as to necessitate the buying of bicycles in carload lots. He continued this business until October, 1928, when he sold his interest in it, to take over the duties of Tax Collector of Escambia County, to which office he had been elected. When he was 21 he had been elected County Commissioner from District No. 1, serving for two terms, from 1920 to 1924; he has been a Notary Public continuously since the age of 21; served as Tax Collector for 12 years.

His reputation as an historian is based on years of research and study, and he has written articles on local history; has published a book on history of Pensacola; he possesses a valuable collection of historical material, including maps, of Florida; he is a well-known collector of stamps and coins; he is Treasurer and past President, charter and life member of Pensacola Historical Society; member of Florida Historical Society; member and Director of Democratic Historical Foundation; member of Advisory Board of "Story of Florida;" Director of Pensacola Interstate Fair Association, and Managing Director of The Dorothy Walton Museum. Since March, 1941, he has edited and published "Wentworth's Magazine," devoted to educational, historical, and fraternal matters. For three years he delivered a 15-minute address each week over Station WCOA, San Carlos Hotel, Pensacola, dealing with various aspects of the history of Florida, Escambia County, and Pensacola. He is a member, National Geographic Society; active in Boy Scout movement, serving as committeeman; former Treasurer, Pensacola Lions Club; is affiliated with Escambia Lodge No. 15, Free and Accepted Masons; member of Omar Lodge of Perfection, Valley of Pensacola Orient of Florida, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite (Southern Jurisdiction, United States of America), Zelica Grotto (Mystic Order, Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm), Damon Lodge No. 13 of Knights of Pythias, Hickory Camp No. 21 of Woodmen of the World (of which he is Consul Commander and in which order he served as Chairman of Board of Head Auditors of Head Camp of Florida), National Court No. 387, of Order of Ben Hur (of which he was Chief), Escambia County Protective Association. Pensacola Lodge No. 4 of Independent Order of Odd Fellows (has served as Chaplain, Vice-grand, Noble Grand and Secretary for six terms in Pensacola Lodge No. 4; was four times delegate to Grand Lodge of Florida; has served as District Deputy Grand Master of Grand Lodge of Florida), Naomi Lodge No. 10 of Daughter of Rebekah, Pensacola Art Institute (charter member), and Pensacola Art Club (charter member and Trustee). He is member of Board of Stewards (for a number of years), Superintendent of Sunday School, and Trustee of Church Property of the Ensley Methodist Church. For years has prepared a weekly historical item for one of the local newspapers.

WILLIAMS, William Horace, Engineering Executive, was born at Fort McIntosh, a U. S. Army Post, at Laredo, Texas, June 18, 1882, son of Major William Morrow (U. S. A.) and Eugenia Lelia (Simon) Williams. His father entered the Army in the Ohio Volunteers at the beginning of the Civil War, when about 19 years of age. He served through the Civil War with the Union Forces, entering the Army as private and retiring as Major. According to the records at Washington, every promotion was for gallantry in action. After the Civil War, he left the Volunteers and was commissioned as Lieutenant in the Regular Army and assigned to Louisiana during the reconstruction days. There he met his future wife, the daughter of Judge Edward Simon. For four generations the Simons have been District Judges in the District of St. Martinville, La. Mr. Williams' great-grandfather was Chief Justice of Louisiana and his grandfather was Judge at St. Martinville, as was his uncle, the late Judge James Simon, who was succeeded on the bench by his son, the present Judge James Simon, making the fourth generation to occupy this Judgeship. Mr. Williams' grandfather, Judge Edward Simon, was either a pupil or classmate of William Wadsworth Longfellow, and furnished him with most of the data upon which Longfellow founded his poem, "Evangeline." Mr. Williams is of the opinion that the Evangeline Oak is in his grandfather's yard at St. Martinville. Mr. Williams was edu-acted at public and high schools in Detroit, Mich., and at the Doane Academy and at Denison University, Granville, Ohio. On December 30, 1908, he married Ruby Iona Mugnier, deceased, and on October 26, 1923, Viola Bloch. He is father of six children: Elizabeth, William Horace, Jr., Eugenie, Milton, John W. and Robert Howard, deceased.

Mr. Williams began his career as a civil engineer with the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., in 1902. He was U. S. Army Engineer on the levees from New Orleans to the Gulf from 1903 to 1904, and resident engineer with Christie & Lowe, New Orleans, from 1905-1907.
